THE President is said to be a consummate flirt.

THE Hensel-Day combination seems to have abandoned the palace car raid through the State. No use. Put Day on the shelf.

GOV. HOADLY and Judge Foraker, opposing candidates for Governor in Ohio, held a joint debate in Toledo, on Thursday evening.

ARCHDEACON FARRAR continues his tour of the country, giving good advice to all classes of people, especially college students.

THE workingmen of Pennsylvania look at the idle workshops and then smile when they are asked to vote the free trade ticket.

THERE is only one thing in which Mr. Hill, of New York, will resemble Hon. J. G. Blaine, and that will be his failure to carry the Empire State.

THE difference: A Republican is a Republican from principle; a Democrat is a Democrat because his father was, or else because he is after the spoils of office.

A GOOD many Bible names are recognizable among those mentioned in connection with the seat of the present warlike disturbances in the East. Smyrna and Salonica are examples.

A TERRIBLE labor riot occurred in St. Louis on Thursday night, caused by the present strike of street railway employes. These riots are becoming quite common of late and will not cease so long as labor is oppressed by capital imposing overwork and underpay.

CARDINAL JOHN MCCLOSKEY died at 1 o'clock on Saturday morning at his archiepiscopal residence in New York. He was the most distinguished prelate of the Catholic church in America. He did as much for the church as one man in this country. He was 75 years of age.

DID Columbus discover America? is a matter of query with some of our exchanges. Perhaps not, but he got credit for it some years ago. Another man's name is used for the country, but, still, looking at the matter on all fours, we would say that Christopher at this late date should not be deprived of the title of discoverer, and, besides, it does not cost anything.

GREAT anxiety is felt in social science circles over the announcement that to supply the American market next year, over 75,000,000 pickles will have to be imported. Billy Morrison, Frank Hurd, Speaker Carlisle and Bill Singerly are said to be holding continuous secret caucuses, to determine how it may be used to promote the revision of the tariff in the next session.

MASSACHUSETTS statistics show that of the 614 divorces granted in that State last year 26 per cent. were for adultery, 45 per cent. for desertion and 18 per cent. for intoxication. Although the ratio of divorces for intoxication had increased 4 per cent. for the year the proportion of that class of causes is still only one-half as large as that from the most serious offense and less than one-third of the number for desertion.

"EMPRESS," O'Brian's big elephant, has killed another man. This is the second man she has killed and several have been injured by her. The second man was killed in Philadelphia on Sunday. This elephant was in Bellefonte last summer and did not look very dangerous, but she seems to be quite a vicious animal. In every instance, however, the victims were persons who had been warned not to go near her and their death or injury was the result of their own rashness.

The Pardon Board Slander.

Every Pennsylvania Democratic exchange received during the past two weeks, among them the Watchman has published an article which first made its appearance in the Pittsburg Post, in which the following extract occupies a conspicuous position:

But worse than even this. Kemble was indicted, convicted and sentenced for his part. Then Colonel Quay, his late partner in "corrupt solicitation," stepped forward as a member of the board of pardons, to screen his confederate from the punishment of law and justice, amid the acclamations of the commonwealth, decreed should be the penalty of crimes. Colonel Quay pardoned Kemble to all intents and purposes. The moral responsibility rests on him to a greater extent than on any or all other officials.

The pardon board which remitted the imprisonment part of the Kemble sentence consisted of Attorney General Henry W. Palmer, Lieutenant Governor Charles W. Stone, Secretary of Internal Affairs Colonel A. K. Dunkel, and Colonel Quay the Secretary of State. It is evident that the Democratic publishers believe that their readers are not acquainted with the personnel of the board, otherwise they would not dare to assume that Colonel Quay was its ruling spirit. Any man who knows Henry W. Palmer, Chas. W. Stone and Aaron K. Dunkel is cognizant of the fact that they are three as incorruptible men as there are in the State. Colonel Quay influenced the action of one man on that board and only one. He knew well that he could not control the others and did not try to.

In the December following the pardon, the surviving members of the Constitutional Convention of 1863 held a re-union at the Monongahela House in the city of Pittsburg. Among those in attendance were Attorney General Henry W. Palmer, ex-Chief Justice Jeremiah S. Black, ex-Governor Andrew G. Curtin and the present Attorney General of the State, Lewis C. Cassidy. After the supper, speeches being in order, Mr. Palmer, among others, was called upon. During his speech he referred to and justified the action of the pardon board in remitting the imprisonment portion of the Kemble sentence, on the ground of its illegal character. Judge Black followed, and no gentleman present can have forgotten his remarks. He stated that when he first heard of the pardon he was in Scotland, and he was much pained to know that such an occurrence could have happened in his native State. But after reaching this country and examining the law in the case he was satisfied that the pardon board was entirely justified in its action. Upon the conclusion of Judge Black's remarks Gov. Curtin took the floor, and in his emphatic manner stated that had he been Governor and possessed with the power, he should not have hesitated to remit the imprisonment portion of Judge Pearson's sentence. Mr. Cassidy followed Gov. Curtin in a powerful speech, in which he reviewed the legal questions of the case and said that Judge Pearson exceeded his powers when he pronounced the Kemble sentence.

The opinions expressed by these gentlemen were largely endorsed by the legal fraternity throughout the State, some going so far as to declare the sentence a judicial outrage. It would be well for the Democratic papers to know what they are talking about when discussing questions of this character.

THE fact that Mr. Conrad B. Day is strictly a "business man," without the slightest ambition for political honors or official influence, does not seem in the least to interfere with his readily adapting himself to the ways of the "political hacks." His nomination was heralded by the Democratic organs as a signal illustration of the office seeking the man. Mr. Day, however, appears to have grown solicitous lest the office may not prove successful in the search, and he has heretofore determined to lend his assistance by means of an industrious electioneering tour.

NEWS from Egypt is to the effect that Osman Digna has died again. This cheerful Thug of the sandy Soudan can die oftener in a given time than any other man on record. If he lives three months longer and keeps up his average he will have died just five times since the last shad season.

New York's Great Explosion.

It has been humorously remarked that in great blow-ups New York can beat the world. The firm of Grant & Ward is a brilliant example of this. But no explosion that ever took place can equal the one that blew up Flood Rock on Saturday last.

A solid rock, nine acres in area, situated in mid stream, partly above and partly below the water's level was undermined by some four miles of galleries varying from five to twenty feet in height and having above them a rock roof of an average thickness of fifteen feet. The cartridges, three inches in diameter, filled in with dynamite and rackarock, which were placed in the roof of the mine and in the pillars supporting, it would have reached over twenty-two miles if laid end to end.

One hundred and forty tons of the most powerful of known explosives were placed under this rock, which is six times the amount used to destroy Hallett's Reef in 1876. It is not surprising that the ignition of this enormous volume of powerful explosives was awaited by many with considerable apprehension. The eternal rocks are not easily rent, however, and tremendous as was the force called into action Saturday, the result seems to justify General Newton's calculations. He destroyed what he intended to destroy, and destroyed nothing else.

This explosion crowns with success, therefore, the patient, skillful labor of ten years, but the task of clearing Hell Gate is not entirely complete. The rock broken and pulverized by the dynamite has to be removed from its bed and several smaller rocks that interfere with the free navigation of that portion of the East River have in turn to be undermined, blown up and cleared away. When all is removed the channel at Hell Gate will have twenty-six feet of water clear of all obstructions.

In spite of the risk, a large portion of the shippers of New York City have been accustomed to take the shorter route East by Hell Gate in preference to going South of Long Island. It is not improbable that this will eventually become the regular channel for all vessels bound for Europe, though there are said to be at present shoals and bars in Long Island Sound which will make it impossible for the deep-draught ocean steamers to take this route, even with the perils of Hell Gate removed. The evidence of the superiority of mind over matter furnished by this successful destruction of Flood Rock makes it easy to believe that all other obstacles to navigation will be got out of the way if East River route offers a substantial advantage to European commerce over the one now usually followed.

Receiver for the Howe Sewing Machine Company.

For some time, says the New York Tribune, it has been known that the affairs of the Howe Sewing Machine Company have been in an embarrassed condition. At a recent meeting of all the parties concerned it was agreed that it would be wise to have a receiver appointed. Upon the petition of John R Kennedy and John W. Wheeler, of New York City, and Eleazer Parmly and James Iteples, of Bridgeport, for the appointment of a receiver it was shown that the liabilities of the company are $750,000, and the available assets $800,000; that the company is unable to meet its liabilities; that with sufficient time if unmolested in conduct of the company's affairs the difficulties under which they now labor may be adjusted to the satisfaction of all. On Thursday the petition was heard by Judge Andrews, sitting in Supreme Court in Danbury, who granted it, and made it returnable to his court on October 6. Mr. Parmly was appointed receiver, and he will conduct affairs for the present. The company owes its employes $30,000, and has outstanding obligations to the amount of $600,000, covered by bonds and mortgages. There is an unsecured floating debt of $150,000, and nominal assets of $1,110,000. The corporation has voted to wind up its affairs as soon as possible for the best interest of all concerned. Mr. Kennedy refuses to make a statement.

GEN. LOGAN says that from what he hears of the Gubernatorial canvass in Viginia it is Robert E. Lee's saddle rather than his nephew that is the real candidate on the Democratic ticket in that State.

It Failed Then and Succeeds Now.

The Boston Advertiser makes a very strange argument when it says: "The South was as solid in 1880 as in 1884; why did we not hear such a cry then as we hear now?" In the first place, we did hear it. It came as an earnest solemn warning. No man whose memory runs back five years can forget how impressively the country was admonished against allowing the solid South to establish its power in the government. Unless our recollection is very much at fault the Boston Advertiser, however strongly opposed to sectional politics, joined in the "cry" that it would not be wise to hand the Republic over to a mastery resting on the solid South with three or four states in the North. The appeal was successful then, and the conspiracy was defeated.

But, in the second place, though the "cry" was heard then, there is a reason for repeating and emphasizing it now which did not exist at that time. The reason is that in 1881 we faced a solid South beaten and in 1885 we face a solid South triumphant. The South was made solid by fraud and force in the one case as in the other; but in the one case, in spite of its fraud and force, it failed to carry the country, and in the other it succeeded. Does the Advertiser see no difference in the situation and in the consequences? It says "the need of the negro was every whit as great" then as now—as if the whole question were simply one of the negro in the South! As if the triumph of the South through fraud and force did not concern the integrity of the country and the rights and interests of the people of the North! It is true that the reign of the bull-dozer and the ballot-box stuffer suppressed the negro and made the South solid in 1880, but they did not control the country; and it is equally true that in 1884 the conspiracy achieved a further measure of success and captured the government. The question of moment for the people is not simply whether fraud and force are to rule the South, but whether they are to rule the nation; whether one vote in the South is to count as much as two votes in the North; and whether, because we may not be able to stop the crime in its local effect, we shall passively allow it to taint the whole government.

General Beaver.

There is no man in public life whose course, all things considered, entitles him more entirely to the respect and love of true Republicans than General Beaver. Whether all have agreed with him at all times or not, they must certainly admire his consistency. In all things he has been faithful to his party and to his principle.

When a candidate for Governor his consistency was what hurt him most. The feeling against Cameron was high, but Gen. Beaver refused to say a word against a man who had always been his friend.

When attending the National convention of the Republican party which nominated Garfield, Gen. Beaver did not vary from his purpose announced before going there, viz., to vote for his "old commander."

We do not believe that Gen. Beaver was one of the intense admirers of Hon. James G. Blaine in the last Presidential campaign. But that Mr. Blaine was the representative of principles and party that he loved sufficed, and no man did him more true service or strove harder to bring about the 81,000 majority which Blaine received. There is no despisable Mugwumpishness in his composition.

This fall he is giving one more exhibition of his great zeal in the service of the Republican party. He has been instrumental in infusing new life in the Ohio campaign which will tell in Republican gains.

The above is his mere political life. In whatever he does he is always consistent, true and brave.

THE court of appeals in New York State just rendered a valuable and important decision. A woman died in New York City, leaving her money—almost $3,000—in trust to be spent in paying for masses for the benefit of her soul. A relative brought suit to get procession of the money. The Superior court gave the plaintiffa verdict which was confirmed by the General Sessions court, but when the case was carried to the court of appeals the judgment of the courts below was reversed. It makes no difference what may be thought of the propriety of the disposition made by a person of his money, the last wishes and requests of the dying should be carried out after they are dead.

MRS. BULLA, the Syracuse, N. Y., woman who fasted 59 days, died on Thursday morning.

THE Watchman, in commenting on the situation in England, remarks that "it is the Democratic principle that the majority shall rule." This is certainly the Democratic principle—using that word in its true sense—but it was not the principle of the party which sails under that name before the war when they kept the Negroes in worse than an Egyptian bondage, neither is it the present principle of that party in the South where the Negro is not permitted to vote. Perhaps it is the principle of that party in the North only because the sturdy sense of justice which influences the Northern Republican would prevent the prevalence of any principle contrary to it.

THE President has found a Naval Officer for Philadelphia at the maritime port of Franklin, Venango county. The old seadog's name is Plumer, and he is credited to Mr. Scott. As Mr. Scott's man, his appointment is a sad disappointment to Gov. Curtin, who had his man for the place, while Mr. Randall also experiences a sense of setbackwardness that is not pleasant. There is something mournful in seeing these virtuous Democratic gentlemen fighting over the loaves and fishes with the same earnestness as if they were "bad" Republican bosses.

THE Free Thinkers, in their ninth annual convention at Cleveland, Ohio, on Saturday, fired off a good deal of their new light on evolution and woman suffrage by which they expect to illumine this benighted world. Somehow the world does not enlighten very much under their influence and the general impression is that if General Newton would only get a fair quantity of his rackarock under the whole concern more real light might be got out of it in that way than by any amount of spontaneous combustion such as the world is obliged to listen to now and then.

A GOOD deal of surprise is professed at the attempt made by the Democracy in New York to prove the President a partisan of Hill's election by forging and publishing a letter in his name heartily endorsing his nomination. Is there anything to be surprised at in that? What day will you pick up a thick-and-thin Democratic paper that is not filled with political falsehood and misrepresentations as glaring as that forgery?

THE spectacle of Governor Hoadly going over Ohio telling people that Abraham Lincoln died a Democrat affords a fine sample of the insolent audacity which has characterized the Democratic campaign. Whether Lincoln died a Democrat or not, the fact remains that he lived a Republican and gave his best energies to the suppression of a war that was distinctively Democratic in its origin and conduct.

DEMOCRATIC newspaper's in discussing the Pardon Board, omit to state that the pardon of Kemble was justified and approved by those good Democrats—Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Ex-Governor Andrew G. Curtin, at a reunion of the Constitutional Convention. This fact, of course, is just a little inconvenient to remember, you know, when they are making their campaign of slander go.

WE desire, before we forget it, to call the attention of the Watchman to the fact that, so recently as last week, Col. Thomas Smith, of Warrenton, Va., was appointed by President Cleveland to the position of United States Attorney for New Mexico. He is a good Democrat and only a year or two ago engaged in the criminal practice of fighting a duel in which he shot his opponent in the mouth.

THE Watchman and other contemptible Democratic sheets, having failed in the attempt to mix Col. Matthew S. Quay in the bribery business, now endeavor to reflect on his character because he, as a member of the Pardon Board, used mercy in pardoning offenders. But they forget that mercy is a virtue—God-like in its character—and the more mercy we exert the more are we like the Perfect One.

REV. J. D. SANDS, of the Seventh U. P. Church, Pittsburg, declares that in running mail trains and handling mails at the postoffices in this Commonwealth on Sundays the United States is subject to prosecution for violating a State law, and every engineer, fireman and postmaster so offending may be compelled to respect our law.

Poetry.

AN OLD PROVERB.

Pouting, my darling, because it rains,
And flowers droop and the rain is falling,
And drops are blurring the window panes
And a moaning wind through the lane is calling!
Crying and wishing the sky was clear,
And roses again on the lattice twining!
Ah, well remember, my foolish dear,
"'Tis easy to laugh when the sun is shining!"

When the world is bright and fair and gay,
And glad birds sing in the fair June weather,
And summer is gathering, night and day,
Her golden chalice of sweets together;
When blue seas answer the sky above,
And bright stars follow the day's declining,
Why, then, 'tis no merit to smile, my love,
"'Tis easy to laugh when the sun is shining!"

But this is the time the heart to test,
When winter is here and storms are howling,
And the earth from under her frozen vest
Looks at the sad sky mute and scowling,
The brave little spirit should rise to meet
The season's gloom and the day's repining;
And this is the time to be glad, for, sweet,
"'Tis easy to laugh when the sun is shining!"

OCTOBER.

The golden woods shine like a glory,
The air is as balm;
The land is as fair as a story;
The waves sing a psalm;
Like censers of incense
The pungent swift odors ascend,
And far as the distant horizon,
Where sea and sky blend,
We know not where Heaven beginneth
Or where Earth may end.

Dear Heart! read the joy
And the sweetness; endeavor to see
The lesson in all its completeness
That God giveth thee;
So full of the light of the spirit
The body should glow,
When nearing its time of departure,
That we could not know
Which step crossed the threshold
Of heaven and left us below!

A CHANGE OF BASE.

Upon the garden gate they swung,
When nights were warm and fair,
And pale Diana often flung
Her light upon the pair.

To night among the leafless trees
The autumn wind makes moan,
The gate is swinging in the breeze,
Its rusty hinges groan;

And where are now the youth so gay
And maiden dressed in lawn,
Oh, whither do their footsteps stray,
Where have the lovers gone?

Go to the parlor warm, go there,
And ask, if you would know,
That double-loaded rocking chair,
That lamp turned down so low.

SHE COMPLIED WITH HIS REQUEST.

"Pray call me a pretty name," said he,
One night to his darling Carrie,
The girl he had courted so long that she
Thought he never meant to marry.
Up from his bosom she raised her head,
And her cheeks grew red as roses,
"I think I will call you 'man,'" she said,
"For they say that 'man proposes.'"

Our Story Teller.

ROYAL LOVE.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

I.

The day before I left London, to occupy the post of second secretary of legation at a small German Court, I took leave of my excellent French singing-master, Monsieur Bonnefoy, and of his young and pretty daughter named Jeanne.

Our farewell interview was saddened by family anxieties. Monsieur Bonnefoy's elder brother, known in the household as Uncle David, had been recently summoned to Paris by his republican associates. His relations in London (whether reasonably or not, I am unable to say) were in some fear of the political consequences that might follow.

At parting, I made Mademoiselle Jeanne a present in the shape of a plain gold brooch. For some time past, I had taken my lessons at Monsieur Bonnefoy's house; his daughter and I often sang together under his direction. Seeing much of Jeanne, under these circumstances, the little gift that I had offered to her was only natural expression of a true interest in her welfare. Idle rumor asserted—quite falsely—that I was in love with her. I was sincerely the young lady's friend; no more, no less.

Our family property—excepting the sum of five thousand pounds left to me by my mother—is landed property, strictly entailed. The estates were inherited by my only brother, Lord Medhurst; and he only enjoyed at rare intervals the blessing of good health. Having myself nothing to live upon but the interest of my mother's little fortune, I had to make my own way in the world. I had naturally a good voice, and I cultivated it. I was ready to sing, without being subject to the wretched vanity which makes objections and excuses—I pleased the ladies—the ladies spoke favorably of me to their husbands—and some of their husbands were persons of rank and influence. After no very long lapse of time, the result of this combination of circumstances declared itself. Monsieur Bonnefoy's lessons became the indirect means of starting me on a diplomatic career—and the diplomatic career made poor Ernest Medhurst, to his own unutterable astonishment, the hero of a love story.

The story being true, I must beg to be excused, if I abstain from mentioning names, places, and dates, when I enter on German ground. Let it be enough to say that I am writing of a bygone year in the present century, when no such thing as a German Empire existed, and when the revolutionary spirit of France was still an object of well-founded suspicion to rulers by right divine on the continent of Europe.

II.

On joining the legation, I was particularly attracted by my chief, the Minister. His manners were oppressively polite; and his sense of his own importance was not sufficiently influenced by diplomatic reserve.

My colleague, the first secretary, was a far more interesting person. Bright, unaffected, and agreeable, he at once interested me when we were introduced to each other.

We took a walk together in the palace gardens on the evening of my arrival. Reaching a remote part of the grounds, we were passed by a lean sallow sour-looking old man, drawn by a servant in a chair on wheels. My companion stopped, whispered to me, "Here is the Prince," and bowed bareheaded. I followed his example as a matter of course. The Prince feebly returned our salutation. "Is he ill?" I asked, when we had put our hats on again.

"Shakspeare," the secretary replied, "tells us that 'one man in his time plays many parts.' Under what various aspects the Prince's character may have presented itself, in his younger days, I am not able to tell you. Since I have been here, he has played the part of a martyr to illness, misunderstood by his doctors."

"And his daughter, the Princess—what do you say of her?"

"Ah, she is not so easily described! I can only appeal to your memory of other women like her, whom you must often have seen—women who are tall and fair, and fragile and elegant; who have delicate aquiline noses and melting blue eyes—women who have often charmed you by their tender smiles and their supple graces of movement. As for the character of this popular young lady, I must not influence you either way: study it for yourself."

"Without a hint to guide me?"

"With a suggestion," he replied, "which may be worth considering. If you wish to please the Princess, begin by endeavoring to win the good graces of the Baroness."

"Who is the Baroness?"

"One of the ladies in waiting—bosom friend of her Highness, and chosen repository of all her secrets. Personally, not likely to attract you; short and fat, and ill-tempered and ugly. Just at this time, I happen myself to get on with her better than usual. We have discovered that we possess one sympathy in common—we are the only people at Court who don't believe in the Prince's new doctor."

"Is the new doctor a quack?"

The secretary looked round, before he answered, to see that nobody was near us.

"It strikes me," he said, "that the Doctor is a spy. Mind! I have no right to speak of him in that way; it is only my impression. He is in the service of our nearest royal neighbor, the Grand Duke; and he has been sent here expressly to relieve the sufferings of the Duke's good friend and brother, our invalid Prince. This is an honorable mission no doubt. And the man himself is handsome, well-bred, and (I don't quite know whether this is an additional recommendation) a countryman of ours. Nevertheless I doubt him, and the Baroness doubts him. You are an independent witness; I shall be anxious to hear if your opinion agrees with ours."

I was presented at Court, toward the end of the week; and, in the course of the next two or three days, I more than once saw the Doctor again. The impression that he produced on me surprised my colleague. It was my opinion that he and the Baroness had mistaken the character of a worthy and capable man.

The secretary obstinately adhered to his own view. "Wait a little," he answered, "and we shall see."

He was quite right. We did see.

III.

But the Princess—the gentle, gracious, beautiful Princess—what can I say of her Highness? I can only say that she enchanted me.

She honored me by speaking to me in my own language, of which she showed herself to be a perfect mistress. I was not only permitted, but encouraged, to talk of my family, and to dwell on my own tastes, amusements, and pursuits. Even when her Highness's attention was claimed by other persons waiting to be presented, I was not forgotten. The Baroness was instructed to invite me for the next evening to the Princess's tea-table; and it was hinted that I should be especially welcome if I brought my music with me, and sang.

On the occasion of my second reception by the Princess, at her little evening party, I detected the Baroness, more than once, in the act of watching her Highness and myself, with an appearance of disapproval in her manner which puzzled me. When I had taken my leave, she followed me out of the room.

"I have a word of advice to give you," she said. "The best thing you can do, sir, is to make an excuse to your Minister, and go back to England."

I must declare, that I failed to understand the Baroness.

IV.

Before the season came to an end, the Court removed to the Prince's country-seat, in the interests of his Highness's health. The members of the English legation were among the guests invited. To me it was a delightful visit. I had again every reason to feel gratefully sensible of the Princess's condescending kindness. Meeting the secretary one day in the library, I said that I thought her a perfect creature. Was this an absurd remark to make? I could see nothing absurd in it—and yet my friend burst out laughing.

"My good fellow, nobody is a perfect creature," he said. "The Princess has her faults and failings, like the rest of us."

I denied it positively.

"Use your eyes," he went on; "and you will see, for example, that she is shallow and frivolous. She has plenty of sentiment (German sentiment), I grant you, but no true feeling. What happened only this morning, when the Prince was in the breakfast-room, and when the Princess and her ladies were dressed to go out riding? Even she noticed the wretchedly depressed state of her father's spirits. The Princess overflowed with sympathy, but she never proposed to stay at home, and try to cheer the old man. Her filial duty was performed to her own entire satisfaction, when she had kissed her hand to the Prince. The moment after she was out of the room—eager to enjoy her ride. We all heard her laughing gayly among the ladies in the hall."

I could have answered this, if our discussion had not been interrupted at the moment. The Doctor came into the library in search of a book. When he had left us, my colleague's strong prejudice against him instantly declared itself.

"Be on your guard with that man," he said.

"Why?" I asked.

"Haven't you noticed," he replied, "that when the Princess is talking to you, the Doctor always happens to be in that part of the room?"

"What does it matter where the Doctor is?"

My friend looked at me with an oddly mingled expression of doubt and surprise. "Do you really not understand me?" he said.

"I don't indeed."

"My dear Ernest, you are a rare and admirable example to the rest of us—you are a truly modest man."

"What did he mean?"

V.

Events followed, on the next day, which (as will presently be seen) I have a personal interest in relating.

The Baroness left us suddenly, on leave of absence. The Prince wearied of his residence in the country; and the Court returned to the capital. The charming Princess was reported to be "indisposed," and retired to the seclusion of her own apartments.

A week later, I received a note from the Baroness, marked "private and confidential." It informed me that she had resumed her duties as lady in waiting, and that she wished to see me at my earliest convenience. I obeyed at once; and naturally asked if there were better accounts of her Highness's health.

The Baroness's reply a little surprised me. She said, "The Princess is perfectly well."

"Recovered already!" I exclaimed.

"She has never been ill," the Baroness answered. "Her indisposition was a sham; forced on her by me, in her own interests. Her reputation is in peril; and you—you hateful Englishman—are the cause of it."

Not feeling disposed to put up with such language as this, even when it was used by a lady, I requested that she would explain herself. She complied without hesitation. In another minute my eyes were opened to the truth. I knew—no; that is too positive—let me say I had reason to believe the Princess loved me!

I find it simply impossible to convey to the minds of others any idea of the emotions that overwhelmed me at that critical moment of my life. It was all confusion at the time; and, when my memory tries to realize it, it is all confusion now. The one thing I can do is to repeat what the Baroness said to me when I had in some degree recovered my composure.

"I suppose you are aware," she began, "of the disgrace to which the Princess's infatuation exposes her, if it is discovered!"

I saw my duty as plainly as she did. "Her Highness's secret is a sacred secret," I said. "I am bound to shrink from no sacrifice which may preserve it."

The Baroness smiled maliciously. "I may have occasion," she answered, "to remind you of what you have just said. In the meantime, the Princess's secret is in danger of discovery."

"By her father?"

"No. By the Doctor."

At first, I doubted whether she was in jest or in earnest. The next instant, I remembered that the secretary had expressly cautioned me against that man.

"It is evidently one of your virtues," the Baroness proceeded, "to be slow to suspect. Prepare yourself for a disagreeable surprise. The Doctor has been watching the Princess, on every occasion when she speaks to you, with some object of his own in view. During my absence, young, sir, I have been engaged in discovering what that object is. My excellent mother lives at the Court of the Grand Duke, and enjoys the confidence of his Ministers. He is still a bachelor; and, in the interest of the succession to the throne, the time has arrived when he must marry. With my mother's assistance I have found out that the Doctor's medical errand here is a pretense. Influenced by the Princess's beauty, the Grand Duke has thought of her first as his future Duchess. Whether he has heard slanderous stories, or whether he is only a cautious man, I can't tell you. But this I know; he has instructed his physician—if he had employed a professed diplomatist, his motive might have been suspected—to observe her Highness privately, and to communicate the result. The Doctor, Mr. Ernest, is not disposed to allow you to prevent him from sending in a favorable report. He has drawn his conclusions from the Princess's extraordinary kindness to the second secretary of the English legation; and he is only waiting for a little plainer evidence to communicate his suspicions to the Prince. It rests with you to save the Princess."

"Only tell me how I am to do it!" I said.

"There is but one way of doing it," she answered; "and that way has (comically enough) been suggested to me by the Doctor himself."

Her tone and manner tried my patience. "Come to the point," I said.

She seemed to enjoy provoking me.

"No hurry, Mr. Ernest—no hurry! You shall be fully enlightened if you will only wait a little. The Prince, I must tell you, believes in his daughter's indisposition. When he visited her this morning, he was attended by his medical adviser. I was present at the interview. To do him justice, the Doctor is worthy of the trust reposed in him—he boldly attempted to verify his suspicions of the daughter, in the father's presence."

"How?"

"Oh, in the well-known way that has been tried over and over again, under similar circumstances! He merely invented a report that you were engaged in a love-affair with some charming person in the town. Don't be angry; there's no harm done."

"But there is harm done," I insisted. "What must the Princess think of me?"

"Do you suppose she is weak enough to believe the Doctor? Her Highness beat him at his own weapons; not the slightest sign of agitation on her part rewarded his ingenuity. All that you have to do is to help her to mislead this medical spy. It's as easy as lying, and easier. The Doctor's slander declares that you have a love-affair in the town. Take the hint—and astonish the Doctor by proving that he has hit on the truth."

It was a hot day; the Baroness was beginning to get excited. She paused, and fanned herself. "Do I startle you?" she asked.

"You disgust me."

She laughed.

"What a thick-headed man this is!" she said pleasantly. "Must I put it more plainly still? Engage in what your English prudery calls a 'flirtation,' with some woman here—the lower in degree the better, or the Princess might be jealous—and let the affair be seen and known by everybody about the Court. Sly as he is, the Doctor is not prepared for that! At your age, and with your personal advantages, he will take appearances for granted; he will conclude that he has wronged you, and misinterpreted the motives of the Princess; and the secret of her Highness's weakness will be preserved—thanks to that sacrifice, Mr. Ernest, which you are so willing and so eager to make."

"I don't wish to appear vain," I rejoined; "But the woman to whom I am to pay these attentions may believe that I really admire her—and it is just possible that she may honestly return the feeling which I am only assuming."

"Well—and what then?"

"It's hard on the woman, surely?"

The Baroness was shocked, unaffectedly shocked.

"Good heavens!" she exclaimed, "how can anything that you do for the Princess be hard on a woman of the lower orders? There must be an end of this nonsense, sir! You have heard what I propose; and you know what the circumstances are. My mistress is waiting for your answer. What am I to say?"

"Let me see her Highness, and speak for myself," said I.

"Quite impossible to-day, without running too great a risk. Your reply must be made through me."

There was to be a Court concert at the end of the week. On that occasion I should be able to make my own reply. In the meanwhile I only told the Baroness I wanted time to consider.

"What time?" she asked.

"Until to-morrow. Do you object?"

"On the contrary, I cordially agree. Your base hesitation may lead to results which I have not hitherto dared to anticipate."

"What do you mean?"

"Between this and to-morrow," the horrid woman replied, "the Princess may end in seeing you with my eyes. In that hope I wish you good-morning."

VI.

The longer I reflected on the Baroness's scheme the less I liked it. I tried to think of some alternative that might be acceptably proposed. The time passed, and nothing occurred to me. In this embarrassing position my mind became seriously disturbed; I felt the necessity of obtaining some relief, which might turn my thoughts for a while into a new channel. The secretary called on me, while I was still in doubt what to do. He reminded me that a new prima-donna was advertised to appear on that night; and he suggested that we should go to the opera. Feeling as I did at the time, I readily agreed.

We found the theater already filled, before the performance began. Two French gentlemen were seated in the row of stalls behind us. They were talking of the new singer.

"She is advertised as 'Mademoiselle Coraly,'" one of them said. "That sounds like an assumed name."

"It is an assumed name," the other replied. "She is the daughter of a French singing-master, named Bonnefoy."

To my friend's astonishment, I started to my feet, and left him without a word of apology. In another minute I was at the stage-door, and had sent in my card to "Mademoiselle Coraly." While I was waiting, I had time to think. Was it possible that Jeanne had gone on the stage? Or were there two singing-masters in existence named Bonnefoy? My doubts were soon decided. The French woman-servant whom I remembered when I was Monsieur Bonnefoy's pupil, made her appearance, and conducted me to her young mistress's dressing-room. Dear good Jeanne, how glad she was to see me!

I found her standing before the glass, having just completed her preparations for appearing on the stage. We were interrupted—too soon interrupted—by the call-boy. He knocked at the door and announced that the overture had begun.

"I have a thousand things to ask you," I told her. "What has made this wonderful change in your life? How is it that I don't see your father——"

Her face instantly saddened; her hand trembled as she laid it on my arm to silence me.

"Don't speak of him now," she said, "or you will unnerve me! Come to me to-morrow when the stage will not be waiting; Annette will give you my address." She opened the door to go out, and returned. "Will you think me very unreasonable if I ask you not to make one of my audience to-night? You have reminded me of the dear old days that can never come again. If I feel that I am singing to you——" She left me to understand the rest, and turned away again to the door. As I followed her out to say good-bye, she drew from her bosom the little brooch which had been my parting gift, and held it out to me. "On the stage or off," she said, "I always wear it. Good-night, Ernest."

I was prepared to hear sad news when we met the next morning.

My good old friend and master had died suddenly. To add to the bitterness of that affliction, he had died in debt to a dear and intimate friend. Offered the opportunity of trying her fortune on the operatic stage, Jeanne made the attempt, and was now nobly employed in earning the money to pay her father's debt.

"It was the only way in which I could do justice to his memory," she said simply. "I hope you don't object to my going on the stage?"

I took her hand, poor child—and let that simple action answer for me. I was too deeply affected to be able to speak.

"It is not in me to be a great actress," she resumed; "but you know what an admirable musician my father was. He has taught me to sing, so that I can satisfy the critics, as well as please the public. There was what they call a great success last night. It has earned me an engagement for another year to come, and an increase of salary. I have already sent some money to our good old friend at home, and shall soon send more. It is my one consolation—I feel almost happy again when I am paying my poor father's debt. No more now of my sad story! I want to hear all that you can tell me of yourself." She moved to the window, and looked out. "Oh, the beautiful blue sky! We used sometimes to take a walk, when we were in London, on fine days like this. Is there a park here?"

I took her to the palace gardens, famous for their beauty in that part of Germany.

Arm in arm we loitered along the pleasant walks. The lovely flowers, the bright sun, the fresh fragrant breeze, all helped her to recover her spirits. When we sat down to rest, the lap of her dress was full of daisies. "Do you remember," she said, "when you first taught me to make a daisy chain? Are you too great a man to help me again, now?"

We were still engaged with our chain, seated close together, when the smell of tobacco smoke was wafted to us on the air.

I looked up and saw the Doctor passing us, enjoying his cigar. He bowed; eyed my pretty companion with a malicious smile, and passed on. "Who is that man?" she asked. "The Prince's physician," I replied. "I don't like him," she said; "why did he smile when he looked at me?" "Perhaps," I suggested, "he thought we were lovers." She blushed. "Don't let him think that! tell him we are only old friends."

We were not destined to finish our flower chain on that day.

Another person interrupted us, whom I recognized as the elder brother of Monsieur Bonnefoy—already mentioned in these pages, under the name of Uncle David. Having left France for political reasons, the old republican had taken care of his niece after her father's death, and had accepted the position of Jeanne's business manager in her relations with the stage. Uncle David's object, when he joined us in the garden, was to remind her that she was wanted at rehearsal, and must at once return with him to the theater. We parted, having arranged that I was to see the performance on that night.

Later in the day, the Baroness sent for me again.

"Let me apologize for having misunderstood you yesterday," she said; "and let me offer you my best congratulations. You have done wonders already in the way of misleading the Doctor. There is only one objection to that girl at the theater—I hear she is so pretty that she may possibly displease the Princess. In other respects, she is just in the public position which will make your attentions to her look like the beginning of a serious intrigue. Bravo, Mr. Ernest—bravo!"

I was too indignant to place any restraint on the language in which I answered her.

"Understand, if you please," I said, "that I am renewing an old friendship with Mademoiselle Jeanne—begun under the sanction of her father. Respect that young lady, madam, as I respect her."

The detestable Baroness clapped her hands, as if she had been at the theater.

"If you only say that to the Princess," she remarked, "as well as you have said it to me, there will be no danger of arousing her Highness's jealousy. I have a message for you. At the concert, on Saturday, you are to retire to the conservatory, and you may hope for an interview when the singers begin the second part of the programme. Don't let me detain you any longer. Go back to your young lady, Mr. Ernest—pray go back!"

VII.

On the second night of the opera the applications for places were too numerous to be received. Among the crowded audience I recognized many of my friends. They persisted in believing an absurd report (first circulated, as I imagine, by the Doctor), which asserted that my interest in the new singer was something more than the interest of an old friend.

The next morning I received a note from the Baroness expressed in these terms:—

"More news! My rooms look out on the wing of the palace in which the Doctor is lodged. Half an hour since, I discovered him at his window, giving a letter to a person who is a stranger to me. The man left the palace immediately afterward. My maid followed him, by my directions. Instead of putting the letter in the post, he took a ticket at the railway station—for what place the servant was unable to discover. Here, you will observe, is a letter important enough to be dispatched by special messenger, and written at a time when we have succeeded in freeing ourselves from the Doctor's suspicions. It is at least possible that he has decided on sending a favorable report of the Princess to the Grand Duke. If this is the case, please consider whether you will not act wisely (in her Highness's interests) by keeping away from the concert."

Viewing this suggestion as another act of impertinence on the part of the Baroness, I persisted in my intention of going to the concert. It was for the Princess to decide what course of conduct I was bound to follow. What did I care for the Doctor's report to the Duke! Shall I own my folly? I do really believe I was jealous of the Duke.

VII.

Entering the Concert Room, I found the Princess alone on the dais, receiving the company. "Nervous prostration" had made it impossible for the Prince to be present. He was confined to his bed-chamber; and the Doctor was in attendance on him.

I bowed to the Baroness, but she was too seriously offended with me for declining to take her advice to notice my salutation. Passing into the conservatory, it occurred to me that I might be seen, and possibly suspected, in the interval between the first and second parts of the programme, when the music no longer absorbed the attention of the audience. I went on and waited outside on the steps that led to the garden; keeping the glass door open, so as to hear when the music of the second part of the concert began.

After an interval which seemed to be endless, I saw the Princess approaching me.

I ventured to present myself in the conservatory.

The Princess was dressed with exquisite simplicity, entirely in white. Her only ornaments were white roses in her hair and in her bosom. I was awed; I was silent. Her Highness's sweet smile encouraged me to venture a little nearer. She pointed to a footstool which the Baroness had placed for her. "Are you afraid of me, Ernest?" she asked softly.

Her divinely beautiful eyes rested on me with a look of encouragement. I dropped on my knees at her feet. She had asked if I was afraid of her. This, if I may use such an expression, roused my manhood. My own boldness astonished me. I answered, "Madam, I adore you."

She laid her fair hand on my head, and looked at me thoughtfully. "Forget my rank," she whispered—"have I not set you the example? Suppose that I am nothing but an English Miss. What would you say to Miss?"

"I should say, I love you."

"Say it to me."

My lips said it on her hand. She bent forward. My heart beats fast at the bare remembrance of it. Oh, Heavens, Her Highness kissed me!

"There is your reward," she murmured, "for all that you have sacrificed for my sake. What an effort it must have been to offer the pretense of love to an obscure stranger! The Baroness tells me this actress—this singer—what is she?—is pretty. Is it true?"

The Baroness was quite mischievous enough to have also mentioned the false impression, prevalent about the Court, that I was in love with Jeanne. I attempted to explain. The gracious Princess refused to hear me.

"Do you think I doubt you?" she said. "Distinguished by me, could you waste a look on a person in that rank of life?" She laughed softly, as if the mere idea of such a thing amused her. It was only for a moment; her thoughts took a new direction—they contemplated the uncertain future. "How is this to end?" she asked. "Dear Ernest, we are not in Paradise; we are in a hard cruel world which insists on distinctions in rank. To what unhappy destiny does the fascination which you exercise over me condemn us both?"

She paused—took one of the white roses out of her bosom—touched it with her lips—and gave it to me.

"I wonder whether you feel the burden of life as I feel it," she resumed. "It is immaterial to me whether we are united in this world or in the next. Accept my rose, Ernest, as an assurance that I speak with perfect sincerity. I see but two alternatives before us. One of them (beset with dangers) is elopement. And the other," she added, with truly majestic composure, "is suicide."

Under the irresistible influence of that glorious creature, I contemplated with such equal serenity the perils of elopement and the martyrdom of love, that I was for the moment at a loss how to reply. In that moment, the evil genius of my life appeared in the conservatory. With haste in her steps, with alarm in her face, the Baroness rushed up to her royal mistress, and said, "For God's sake, madam, come away! The Prince desires to speak with you instantly."

Her Highness rose, calmly superior to the vulgar excitement of her lady in waiting. "Think of it to-night," she said to me, "and let me hear from you to-morrow."

She pressed my hand; she gave me a farewell look. I sunk into the chair that she had just left. Did I think of elopement? Did I think of suicide? The elevating influence of the Princess no longer sustained me; my nature became degraded. Horrid doubts rose in my mind. Did her father suspect us?

IX.

Need I say that I passed a sleepless night?

The morning found me with my pen in hand, confronting the serious responsibility of writing to the Princess, and not knowing what to say. I had already torn up two letters, when Uncle David presented himself with a message from his niece. Jeanne was in trouble, and wanted to ask my advice.

My state of mind, on hearing this, became simply inexplicable. Here was an interruption which ought to have annoyed me. It did nothing of the kind—it inspired me with a feeling of relief.

I naturally expected that the old Frenchman would return with me to his niece, and tell me what had happened. To my surprise, he begged that I would excuse him, and left me without a word of explanation. I found Jeanne walking up and down her little sitting-room, flushed and angry. Fragments of torn paper and heaps of flowers littered the floor; and three unopened jewel-cases appeared to have been thrown into the empty fireplace. She caught me excitedly by the hand the moment I entered the room.

"You are my true friend," she said; "you were present the other night when I sang. Was there anything in my behavior on the stage, which could justify men who call themselves gentlemen in insulting me?"

"My dear, how can you ask the question?"

"I must ask it. Some of them send flowers, and some of them send jewels; and every one of them writes letters—infamous abominable letters—saying they are in love with me, and asking for appointments as if I was——!"

She could say no more. Poor dear Jeanne—her head dropped on my shoulder; she burst out crying. Who could see her so cruelly humiliated—the faithful daughter, whose one motive for appearing on the stage had been to preserve her father's good name—and not feel for her as I did? I forgot all considerations of prudence; I thought of nothing but consoling her; I took her in my arms; I dried her tears; I kissed her; I said: "Tell me the name of any one of the wretches who has written to you, and I will make him an example to the rest!" She shook her head, and pointed to the morsels of paper on the floor. "Oh, Ernest, do you think I asked you to come here for any such purpose as that? Those jewels, those hateful jewels, tell me how I can send them back! spare me the sight of them!"

So far, it was easy to console her. I sent the jewels at once to the manager of the theater—with a written notice to be posted at the stage door, stating that they were waiting to be returned to the persons who could describe them.

"Try, my dear, to forget what has happened," I said. "Try to find consolation and encouragement in your art."

"I have lost all interest in my success on the stage," she answered, "now I know the penalty I must pay for it. When my father's memory is clear of reproach, I shall leave the theater never to return to it again."

"Take time to consider, Jeanne."

"I will do anything you ask of me."

I was called away to speak to my servant. He brought with him the secretary's card, having a line written on it: "I am waiting at your rooms, on business which permits of no delay."

As we shook hands, Jeanne asked me if I knew where her uncle was. I could only tell her that he had left me at my own door. She made no remark; but she seemed to be uneasy on receiving that reply.

Working Women Aroused.

Several weeks ago we were compelled to criticise the actions of Secretaries Lamar and Manning in depriving a number of poor women—many of them widows of Union soldiers—of their means of making a living by giving out the laundry work of the Interior and Treasury Departments by contract. Since then the Women's National Industrial League has taken up the matter and entered a spirited protest against the course pursued by the officials we have mentioned.

The League declares that "the act of robbing the soldiers' and workingmen's widows of Washington of the washing of the towels of the Departments by Secretaries Lamar and Manning, and letting out the same in the interests of Chinese laundries, merits just indignation and solemn protest." The President of the organization, Mrs. Charlotte Smith, in a pointed and pithy letter, calls the attention of President Cleveland to the injustice complained of and the evil effects likely to result from it, not only to those who are thereby deprived of the means of support but to Department employes generally.

What impression may be produced upon the minds of the President and his officers by the remonstrance and appeal of the Industrial League it is difficult to foretell. It has, however, become clearly apparent that great hardships and suffering have been brought upon many deserving, hard working and poorly paid women, without any counterbalancing advantage to the public service. The very slight saving alleged to have been effected by giving out washing by contract is of little importance when compared with the risks arising from the adoption of this system.—Irish World.

—People are liable to catch cold at any time in the year, and a cure is always in order. A gentleman who has had experience with colds and their remedy writes thus: "There is no universal specific for colds even in their earliest stages. That which will cure one patient, will have no effect on another, and a cure for a person to-day may, ten days hence, be useless. But most cases of the young or middle-aged can be cured, if taken in season, by some of the remedies employed for this purpose. The following are a few of the methods used to cure colds in their beginning, and others doubtless occur in the minds of the readers: Catnip tea made moderately strong, with sugar, and milk, chestnut leaf tea, or tea made from any of the mints, especially pennyroyal, hot lemonade, camphor sling, or a long draught of cold water. Either of these should be taken after the patient is in bed, to produce perspiration, and care must be taken the following day. A tablespoonful of water made hot with cayenne pepper, taken in sips to moisten the mouth and throat, has been my individual remedy for years. Heating the feet is often sufficient, and a poultice of boiled onions is good where there is tightness of throat or lungs. Violent exercise, as rapidly sawing wood or mopping floors, will sometimes seem to answer the desired end."

—P. T. Barnum makes the city of Philadelphia the following proposition over his own signature: "I will undertake and give bonds for the fulfillment of the contract, that, if the city of Philadelphia will stop selling liquor and give me as much as we expended here for liquor last year, I will pay all the city expenses; no person within her borders shall pay taxes; there shall be no insurance on property; a good dress suit shall be given to every poor girl, boy, man and woman; all educational expenses shall be paid; a barrel of flour shall be given to every worthy person, and I will clear a half million or a million dollars by the operation."

—With the indomitable pluck and enterprise which always characterize the people of Howard they have made arrangements to erect a new and very complete system of water works. In doing this they will summon to their aid the best skill in the country and the works will be to the town a source of never failing profit. In these days of temperance discussion no town is a pleasant home without a good supply of nature's beverage and we congratulate Howard on the prospect of becoming one of the most important towns along the Bald Eagle Valley R. R.

—It is generally supposed that Presbyterian ministers and elders are as fond of chicken as representatives of any other denomination and when the Presbyterian Synod assembles this week the consumption of fowls is expected to be something extraordinary. It is true that these remarks about chickens and ministers have been made before and we promise not to repeat them this year, and are willing to offer a leather medal to any man who, between now and next Thursday, will refrain from mentioning chickens in connection with the approaching great religious gathering.

—The postmaster at Hastings, Nebraska, writes to the postmaster of Reading Pa., under date of August 24, 1885, as follows: "Will you inform any parties within the reach of the delivery of your office by the name of Wolfe, that there was one George Wolfe died at McCook, Neb., on the 10th inst., of typhoid fever, and he has left some property. Papers in Pennsylvania requested to copy. Address William S. Hammonds, Hastings P. O., Nebraska.

—In a manufacturing town in Massachusetts on a recent Saturday an employer paid his workmen $700 in crisp, new bills that had been securely marked. On Monday $410 of these identical bills were deposited in the bank by the saloonkeepers. When the fact was announced the workmen were so startled that they resolved to vote to make the place a no license town.

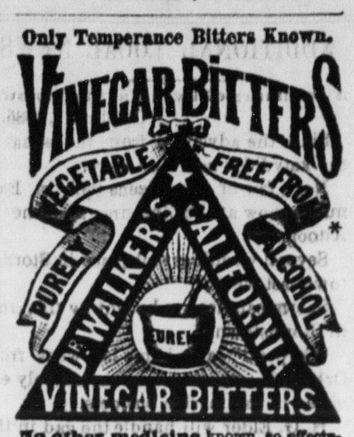
—A wonderful turkey gobbler has been discovered in Tennessee. Recently it indicated a desire to imitate a motherly hen, and to test its patience a dozen eggs were placed under it. The gobbler sat the required period, and at the proper time a brood of little chicks appeared. They are thriving, and are greatly attached to their strange parent.

—A reunion of the 16th Pa. Cavalry will be held at Mifflintown on Thursday, Oct. 15. Gen. Gregg, Col. Robison, Capts. Carey, McDowell, Ressler and C. H. Miller, Adjt. General of Brigade, and many other prominent officers and men will be present. Orders for excursion tickets can be had by addressing T. D. Garman, Mifflintown, Pa.

Queer reading would be the history of names. We cannot, however, go into the subject now, except so far as to say that Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" was called by that name, in an informal fashion long before the Doctor dreamed of advertising it for public use. Speaking of it he would say to his patients, "This is my favorite remedy for all troubles of the blood," &c., and its success was so great that he finally spelled the name with capital letters.

Medical, Etc.

Only Temperance Bitters Known.



No other medicine known so effectually purges the blood of deep-seated diseases.

Millions bear testimony to its wonderful curative effects.

It is a purely Vegetable Preparation, made from the native herbs and roots of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol.

It removes the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health.

It is the great Blood Purifier and Life-giving Principle; a Gentle Purgative and Tonic; a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the power of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to.

The Alterative, Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Anti-Bilious, Solvent, Diuretic and Tonic properties of VINEGAR BITTERS exceed those of any other medicine in the world.

No person can take the BITTERS according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Bilious, Remittent, Intermittent and Malarial Fevers, are prevalent throughout the United States, particularly in the valleys of our great rivers and their vast tributaries during the Summer and Autumn, especially during seasons of unusual heat and dryness.

These Fevers are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach, liver and bowels. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these organs, is absolutely necessary.

There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as it will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed.

It Invigorates the Stomach and stimulates the torpid Liver and Bowels, cleansing the blood of all impurities, imparting life and vigor to the frame, and carrying off without the aid of Calomel, or other minerals, all poisonous matter from the system.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Pneumonia, Dizziness, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are at once relieved by VINEGAR BITTERS.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Neuralgia, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, the Bitters have no equal. In these, as in all constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS has shown its great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to Paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take occasional doses of VINEGAR BITTERS.

Skin Diseases, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Swellings, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations, Humors and diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of the Bitters.

Pin, Tape and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics, will free the system from worms like VINEGAR BITTERS.

Measles, Scarlet Fever, Mumps, Whooping Cough, and all children's diseases may be made less severe by keeping the bowels open with mild doses of the Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, this Bitters has no equal.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood when its impurities burst through the skin in Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when, and the health of the system will follow.

In conclusion: Give the Bitters a trial. It will speak for itself. One bottle is a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Around each bottle are full directions printed in different languages.

The Buckeye State Triumphantly Redeemed.

Republican Gains.

The latest telegrams received to-day from Ohio say that the Democrats of that State concede the election of Foraker by 15,000 plurality.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 13.—The republicans, with the better organization, got out their vote in the cities to-day, while in the country where feeling seemed most in their favor, the vote was not so fully drawn out. The cold rain fell all day with no more than a half hour's cessation at any time. This did not seem to have helped the democrats as heretofore. The Germans in all of the cities went strongly for the republicans, and the colored men to a considerable extent pulled with the democrats. The colored and mining votes may make Hoadly run some better. Those figuring at republican state headquarters claim 20,000 for the head of the ticket and no less than 15,000 for the rest of it.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 13.—Ninety six wards and precincts give Foraker 14,572, Hoadly 10,835, Leonard 1,134. Net republican gain, 1,442 Returns from one ward in Cincinnati, the Ninth, show exactly the same republican majority as was given in 1883.

9.30 p. m.—It is impossible yet to compare the sources of gain of the prohibition candidate, but a cursory examination of the returns so far received indicate democratic losses where there are prohibition gains. In other words so far as can now be seen, the prohibition vote is drawn from both parties. One hundred and thirty-one precincts; Foraker, 20,375; Hoadly, 15,979; Leonard, 2131. Net republican gain, 2,131.

One hundred and sixty-five precincts give Foraker 25,093, Hoadly 21,000, Leonard 877. Net republican gain 2,499. Up to this time but little has been heard from the legislature. A republican senator has been elected in the Twenty-second district. Two republican representatives are elected in Columbiana county and one in Meigs, one democratic representative in Tuscarawas and one in Coshocton.

One hundred and ninty-eight precincts show net republican gain of 3,004. This is nearly one-tenth of the voting precincts in the state.

Three hundred and thirty precincts in the state show a net republican gain of 4,827.

Five hundred and four wards and precincts in the state give a net republican gain of 7,777. If the same ratio obtains in the remaining precincts Foraker's majority will be about 18,000. Private dispatches from Columbus say Secretary Bushnell, of the republican committe, makes this estimate and that the democratic committee concedes Hoadly's defeat.

Three Young Girls Drowned.

KITTANNING, Oct. 12.—A terrible accident happened on the Mahoning creek, at what is known as Mill Iron dam, this afternoon. A party of young folks were on their way to Mill Iron Church and, there being no bridge, were obliged to row across. When they arrived at the creek Beckie and Annie Neale, daughters of W. C. Neale, and Mary, daughter of James Neale, got into a small flatboat, with W. S. Neale as oarsman. When they had reached the middle of the creek the boat sank. The girls grasped hold of the young man, but he was an expert swimmer and managed after a great struggle to get loose and get to shore. The three girls were drowned. About two hours after the accident the bodies were found. Their ages ranged from fifteen to eighteen years.

The Millers in Session.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Oct. 13.—The Pennsylvania State association of Millers met in annual convention here to-day. The attendance of members is large. President Isenberg, of Huntingdon, made the opening address. Landis Levan, the treasurer, read his annual report which showed the association to be in a prosperous condition. New members were enrolled and officers for the ensuing year were elected. This evening the subject of 'Practical Points' was discussed by H. S. Klingler, of Butler, and 'The Art of Mill Building by Albert Hoppin, of Milwaukee.

Fined $50 and Costs.

WILKESBARRE, Oct. 12.—Christian C. Conrad, the mine boss of the West End company's mine at Macauaqua, found guilty of manslaughter, having been adjudged responsible for the explosion by which ten men lost their lives and pronounced guilty by Judge Woodward, was called for sentence to-day. The sentence was that he should pay a fine $50 with cost of prosecution and to stand committed until sentence was complied with. Conrad immediately paid the fine and costs, aggregating $200 and then departed for his home.

The Great Explosion.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—The shores around Hell Gate were black with people yesterday morning. They came on elevated roads, in horse-cars and in carriages and poured their steady stream to where the blue-coated policemen and the lines of soldiers with gleaming bayonets arrested their progress. On the water, steamers and tugs and hundreds of rowboats, all filled with people, lay awaiting the great explosion. Thousands of eyes were fixed on Flood Rock, which was soon to crumble to atoms. The sheds and houses which for nine years have covered the rock had been removed. A solitary derrick remained there and from it floated a United States flag. Workmen were moving rapidly about on the barren rock and the navy launches steamed hither and thither warning vessels that sought to come through the Gate that the explosion was about to take place, and that they would better keep out of the way. The knowledge that tons of high explosives were under the innocent-looking rock around which the flood tide lay with unaccustomed tranquility was a powerful argument in inducing the skippers of the various craft which sought to pass that they ought to obey the mandates of the straight and glittering young officers who waved their hands to them from the launches.

The interest among the spectators was intense. Enough dynamite and rackarock was to be exploded to level every building on Manhattan Island. The forces of science were to be employed on a gigantic scale. What would be the exact result on one knew, though such veteran dynamiters as General Newton, General Abbott, Lieutenant Derby and Lieutenant Zalinski were pretty confident that the giant forces which had been conjured up could be properly controlled. General Newton felt no more anxiety in controlling the explosion than he would have felt in holding the reins over a dray horse. The dynamite was his slave, and while realizing the great forces he was employing, he felt that it would obey him. All through the upper part of the city windows had been opened and pier glasses put to bed in preparation for the concussion, which was expected to break glass and tumble down crockery by those who realized more the force employed than the method of its application. In Astoria and on Ward's and Randall's Islands the same precautions were observed. The atmosphere was hazy, but the sky was clondless and the scene was flooded with the bright October sunshine.

The hour of 11, the time set for the explosion, approached and a state of intense suspense took possession of every one. The flag was hauled down from the derrick and a tug took the last man from the rock and conveyed him to the shore. There was a hush of breathless expectation. Minutes glided away and still Flood Rock reared its head in the glassy space of deserted water. The suspense became painful and one felt like crying out or moving about rapidly.

General Newton's daughter Mary, who nine years ago with the touch of her baby finger destroyed Hallet's reef, pressed the key which fired the mine at 11.13 a. m. and like a flash the barren rock disappeared, and in its place a serrated wall of water, 1,200 feet long and 150 feet high at its greatest attitude, stood flashing in the sun. It looked like a miniature range of snow-covered mountains, and seemed to stand stationery and first. Then, like Niagara pouring over its precipices, it fell back. Immediately the space between Mill Rock and Hallet's Point was a seething mass of waves, some white as snow, some smoke-colored, and some black. They mingled and met and dashed against each other in wild confusion, showing all sorts of turgid tints and colors. Some after a minute could be seen dashing their foam high along the Long Island shore and over the surface of Mill Rock. To the west of the scene of the explosion the waves were not high and a fleet of rowboats started for the place where Flood Rock had been. The large boats approached the place, but still kept at a safe distance. The air was permeated with an order of carbonic acid gas, which was blown over the north part of the city by the wind.

Flood Rock had been shattered into fragments, but a few broken rocks and part of the derrick which had held the flag earlier in the morning could be seen above the surface of the disturbed water. One of the greatest engineering feats ever known had been accomplished, the result of nine years of hard labor and a great expenditure of money had been reached and the show was over. Then came the rush home of the spectators, who will tell their grandchildren of the day they saw this great blow struck at Hell Gate. Those who have seen torpedo salutes fired have seen more stately columns of water thrown into the air, and the sunset gun often makes more noise than did the explosion of Flood Rock. But high explosives never before accomplished so great a work, and the whole thing will never be forgotten by those who were present.

The Explosion a Success.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—A large number of people visited the scene of the explosion yesterday at Hell Gate to-day and carried off mementos of the occasion. The northern end of the reef still projects from the water, even at high tide. The officer in charge, however, declares the explosion a complete success. He says that the projecting portion is so honeycombed with fissures that it will fall to pieces when operations are begun for its removal. To a casual observer it appears intact. If any further blastings shall be necessary the system of surface blasts will be resorted to.

Logan's Apt Rejoinder.

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—The World's Washington special says: When asked about a recent critcism accusing him of reviving the war issue in his discussion at Baltimore at Fitzhugh Lee's campaign, General Logan said it was Lee who brought up the issue. It was his going out with his cavalry parade and attempting to revive war memories that induced him to venture upon the subject. He thought it was as proper for a union soldier to dwell upon the old issues of the war as it was for ex-confederates.

St. Louis Business Men Excited.

ST LOUIS, Oct. 12.—The meeting of the business men to discuss the street car strike this morning was quite exciting. The report of the sub-committee made and submitted on Saturday was rejected. John D. Perry, banker and father-in-law of Mayor Francis, expressed himself opposed to recognizing the Knights of Labor, which he described as an irresponsible body of men. L. B. Ripley, an iron merchant, said the way to act was to take the rioters by the throat and make them respect the majesty of the law. Mr. Ripley's speech was greeted with cheers. A new committee was appointed, which returned a resolution calling on the mayor to protect life and property. After some discussion this resolution was adopted and a committee was appointed to wait on Mayor Francis with it. During the meeting John R. Lynchberger stated, for the street car proprietors, that they had no grievances and wanted no arbitration of business men or any one else.

A Remarkable Railroad Accident.

WHEELING, W. Va., Oct. 10.—On the Pittsburg and Wheeling division of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad this afternoon, at the eastern end of this city, freight engine No. 305, light, was going east ahead of the regular freight train when it met a second train coming west. The engineer reversed his engine, and he and the fireman jumped. The engines came together lightly, the pilots only being demolished. The train stopped, and engine No. 305 started backward at a fearful rate of speed. After going a few hundred feet the east bound train was met. The two engines came together with such a shock that both were wrecked. Tom Gates, of Pittsburg, Pa., the engineer of the east-bound freight, had one leg broken and was hurt internally; he will probably die. William Doyle, of Pittsburg, a brakeman, had his head and shoulders crushed; his injuries are serious. Robert Gates, a Wheeling fireman, was bruised. The wreck delayed trains several hours.

Virginia's Small Earthquake.

RICHMOND, Oct. 10.—An earthquake shock was felt in parts of this city last night, but the vibrations were very slight. Advices from other points west and south of Richmond report slight shocks between the hours of 11.30 and 11 last night.

LYNCHBURG, Oct. 10.—Three distinct shocks of earthquake were felt in this city last night between 11 and 12 o'clock. A loud, rumbling sound preceded each shock. The direction of the disturbance was due north and south. Many people, scared by the noise and the shaking of windows and furniture, rushed into the street. This is the first shock felt in this vicinity for ten years.

STAUNTON, October 10.—The earthquake shock was very perceptible here last night at 11.40, continuing over half a minute. It was so pronounced that persons ran out of buildings and many were aroused.

Successful Thieves.

TRENTON, Oct. 11.—Burglars on Friday night last perpetrated two bold robberies in this city, one at the mansion of Francis Hendayer, on Greenwood Avenue, and another at the residence of E. J. C Atterbury, on West State Street. At both places they secured diamonds and jewelry worth several thousand dollars.

Entrance was effected at the Hendayer mansion by climbing up on a second story veranda. The thieves here took a number of relics and heirlooms which had been in the possession of the family for generations. One was a crucifix of solid gold containing a piece of the cross upon which the Saviour was crucified. Another was a necklace of pearls which has been in the family about 150 years. The police have no clues to the burglars. Both robberies took place before 11 o'clock.

A Minnesota Witch.

ST. PETER, Minn., Oct. 12.—There is considerable excitement in Belgrade, this county, in a settlement of Swedes, over a case of what they believe is witchcraft. A woman has been sick for three years, and accuses her aunt of being a witch and causing her sickness. The Swedish church has held a trial, and witnesses solemnly testified to a belief in witches, and stated what they had seen in this particular case. The statement was made by one woman that she was posted in witchcraft, and had seen witches send the craft off through the air, and seen it strike persons who were soon taken sick. What will be done with the alleged witch has not been determined.

Killed by a Fall.

CHESTER, Oct. 11.—A fatal accident occurred to Mrs. Julia Stevens, the mother of Rev. Theodore Stevens, pastor of Madison Street Methodist Church, this morning. She had been sleeping in the third story of the residence of her son, and, arising about four o'clock this morning, she went to the window and accidentally fell to the pavement. In her descent she struck the second story shutters, and it was this that aroused the inmates of the house. When found she was frightfully mangled and bruised and lived but a few minutes. She was well known in Philadelphia, where she spent much of her life. She was in her seventieth year.

Going Home to Vote.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—The Post says that the President had decided to go home and vote in the New York State election. It is probable that he will leave Washington on Monday, Nov. 2, cast his ballot for Hill the following day, and then return to the White House. He will not be away from this city more than four days. The President is a voter in Buffalo, and his name is on the register of the Ninth ward. He will be accompanied as far as New York by Secretary Manning and Col. Lamont. Mr. Manning will vote in Albany and Col. Lamont in Cortland county.

Narrow Escape of Passengers.

SHAMOKIN, Pa., Oct. 13.—A Philadelphia and Reading passenger train due here at 10 a. m. to-day, collided with a coal train at Big mountain. The two engines were telescoped and the passengers and train men made a narrow escape from death. Travel was blockaded for some time. Loss aggregates $20,000.

—We are pleased to notice that the Centre Democrat, of this place is about to establish a very complete book bindery in connection with the printing office. Mr. John D. It is the only bindery in Bellefonte and consequently can do work cheaper than any other parties can have it done by sending away to the city. SPECIAL MENTION.

Tonic, Alterative and Cathartic.

Simmons Liver Regulator, purely vegetable, is not unpleasant to the taste. It is the medicine generally used in the South to arouse the torpid liver to healthy action. It cures malaria, biliousness, dyspepsia, headache, constipation and piles. The action of the Regulator is free from nausea or griping. It is most effective in in starting the secretions of the liver, causing the bile to act as a cathartic. When there is an excess of bile in the stomach, the Regulator is an active purge; after the removal of the bile, it will regulate the bowels and impart vigor and health to the whole system.

Whenever and Wherever

Diseases of a choleraic type prevail, or there is cause to apprehend a visit from them, the system should be toned, regulated and reinforced by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Perfect digestion and a regular habit of body are the best safeguards against such maladies, and both are secured by this inestimable tonic and alterative. The Bitters are also extremely serviceable in remedying such disorders. If promptly taken in bilious colic, diarrhœa and cholera morbus, the disease is usually frustrated. In diarrhœa cases, it is only necessary to restore the tone of the relaxed bowels, and this is one of the specific effects of this medicine. Wind on the stomach, heartburn, biliousness, nausea, headache and other symptoms of disturbance in the gastric and hepatic regions are also speedily relieved by this excellent remedy. As a family medicine it is invaluable, since it promptly and completely remedies those ailments which are of most frequent occurrence.

Rally! Rally!

A Grand Mass Meeting of the people will be held in the Big Tent at Milesburg, Saturday Oct. 24, 1885, to discuss the reasons why our merchants are failing, our farmers losing money, our mechanics and laborers idle, and why monopoly is eating up the substance of the people as a hungry army eats fresh bread. Meetings in the afternoon at 2 o'clock, and in the evening at 7 o'clock. Ladies especially invited. A brass band will be in attendance. Farmers of Centre county, hitch your big horses in your big wagons and bring your wives, sons and daughters to this meeting. Bring your neighbors who haven't got teams. Spend one day in finding out why your farms are falling in value, and your taxes increasing. Hon. Jesse Harper, of Illinois, the friend of Lincoln, T. A. Armstrong, the statesman labor leader, Hon. Chas. Jenkins, of Ohio, the statistical farmer orator, will positively be present and discuss these questions. Hon. Chas. N. Brumm, of Pennsylvania, and Gen. A. J. Warner, of Ohio, have been invited and it is believed will be present. Efforts are being made to get special trains, but we invite the people to come in their wagons, on horseback or on foot. These questions go right down into the pockets of everybody. Give one day for the benefit of your pocketbook. By order of the State Committee. T. P. RYNDER.

Vitalized Phosphites.

HEALTH AND VIGOR FOR THE BRAIN AND NERVOUS SYSTEM

CROSBY'S VITALIZED PHOS-PHITES

Composed of the Nerve giving Principles of the Ox-Brain and the Embryo of the Weat and Oat.

This is a standard preparation with all physicians who treat mental or nervous disorders. The formula is on every label. Its chemical composition is superintended by a professor of Chemistry.

As it is identical in its composition with brain matter, it is rapidly absorbed, and quickly relieves the depression from intellectual efforts, fatigue, loss of memory, or mental irritability.

Sleeplessness, irritation, nervous exhaustion, inability to work or study is but a brian-hunger—in urgent cases, brain starvation. This brain nutriment quickly feeds the hungry nerves and restores brain power. It is a cure for nervous disorders and debility in old or young.

BRAIN WORKERS NEED BRAIN FOOD.

Crosby's Vitalized Phos-phites should be taken as a Special Brain Food.

Spring Mills Budget.

On Monday morning all that remained mortal of the late Mrs. Margaret A. Woods was consigned to its last resting place, "the Mother Earth." Widow Woods, by which name she was so well known, has been for many years a resident of this place. For about twenty years she resided in a house which now belongs to the Allison estate. Two years ago she built a comfortable residence near what has been a representative of her firm faith, the Presbyterian church, with the desire that her remaining days should be spent near the earthly vineyard of her Master. Her remains were followed to the tomb by an unusually large number of relatives and friends.

The M. E. Sunday-school of this place picniced at the Penn Caves last Saturday. The services of the "Challenge Cornet Band" were engaged for the occasion. Headed by this young, but already well-known organization, they were a merry party. After all had explored the underground wonders they did not forget the wants of the boys who had kept their spirits and feet on the go with the best of music. Shortly before leaving the picnic ground the band was kindly invited to partake of refreshments provided for their especial benefit at the pleasant home of Mr. William Stover. It is true, we were not present at this supper, though we do wish we had been invited. From what the boys say, we are led to believe that the good ladies who prepared the supper were in league with and knew the wants to perfection of the boys who toot horns.

Wonder what has become of that individual who formerly hailed from Snyder county—we mean the fellow who was for three months a member of a certain brass band on an expenditure for instrument, music, etc., of ten cents. We advise other bands to spot him.

Mr. John Coldron will soon erect another dwelling house in the southern part of town. This one, he says, is for himself. We hope he will not sell it, but will move here and help to build the town up with good, go-ahead men just such as he is. As a constructor and builder, Mr. C— stands among the foremost.

The engine of the early east-bound train which leaves this place at 6:30 a. m. and Mr. Samuel Pick's cow both wanted the track at the same time a few mornings ago. The engine, as usual, came out best, leaving the cow minus one horn and with a broken spinal column. The trains of late have been playing havoc with stock in general. So long as the railroad company are willing to pay for the damage they do we will be satisfied.

Mr. I. J. Grenobie has dispensed with stoves and had a heater placed in his cellar large enough to heat his entire store rooms and dwelling. So far it has worked like a charm.

Mr. David Ripga claims to have the boss pumpkin, measuring 5 feet 4½ inches in circumference. Who can report a larger one?

Cider and apples are plenty, the former selling slowly at two dollars per barrel and the latter at any price you feel like paying for them.

Farmers commenced corn husking. This crop is also a good one and don't command a high price in the market. We think it early in the season, but farmers say they must commence early or cold weather will catch their fingers.

More anon, SCRAWLER.

—There are several youngsters about town who make themselves a nuisance by ringing door bells and then running away before anyone comes to the door. Some of the families who recently located in Merchant Square have been greatly troubled in this way. While they do not care to arrest these children they will be compelled to do so if the practice is continued.

THE WONDER

Is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully noted (without prejudice) its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires of them. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Cold Hands and Feet.

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks, and her face was badly broken out with a humor. She was low-spirited; troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve; and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

Riots in St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 9.—About noon the striking car driver and conductors began to assemble in knots in various parts of the city and things presented an ominous appearance. A riot soon occurred on the Chauteau avenue road and several cars were dumped into the gutter, and the drivers and conductors were severely handled. Next a big crowd of strikers attacked several cars of the Union Depot line on the Twelfth street bridge. The drivers and conductors were badly beaten, one conductor being rendered insensible. Two ladies were badly bruised on the Twelfth street bridge while leaping from a car. Mayor Francis and Chief-of-Police Harrigan with a squad arrived on the bridge soon afterwards and made some arrests, the rioters disappearing suddenly. About 2 o'clock p. m. a riot broke out on Cass avenue, the crowd extending from Ninth to Fourteenth street. At least a dozen cars of the Cass avenue line were laid in the gutters by the mob. All the conductors and drivers were handled roughly and the teams turned loose on the streets. Shortly after this another riot occured on the tracks of the Union line on O'Fallon street, near Tenth.

The first really serious event in the street car strike, and one involving the loss of life, occurred about 3 o'clock this afternoon on Stodkard's avenue. One of the cars of the Union Depot line was coming up the avenue in charge of Policemen Griffiths and Harmon, and when near Hickory street it was surrounded by some fifty men, who began to cut the harness and make other demonstrations. The officers twice ordered the men to desist, but they paid no attention to the command and assaulted the officers with sticks and rocks. Harman was struck with a rock and Griffith was knocked down by a man named John Hovey. While the latter was beating Griffith, Harmon drew his pistol and shot him in the head, killing him.

The Injunction Case.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Oct. 8.—Examiner Weiss this morning resumed the taking of testimony in the South Penn railroad case. The first witness called was Mr. Carnegie, of Pittsburg, who stated that he had put one million dollars into the enterprise because Mr. Vanderbilt had put in five million dollars. When the latter gentleman desired to withdraw he was perfectly willing to follow, as he considered Mr. Vanderbilt the key to the situation. He considered the action of Mr. Vanderbilt proper, and was satisfied with his security of 3 per cent. He knew little of the details, as the business had been entrusted by him to his brother.

The next witness was Dr Hostetter, of Pittsburg, who was interested to the amount of $670,000. He termed the proposed transfer as "underhand dickering," with which the subscribers had nothing to do. He was opposed to the movement, but his protest was apparently of no avail. He spoke disparagingiy of Messrs. Vanderbilt and Twombly.

Mr. Chalfant, of Pittsburg, was next called. He had invested $50,000, but knew little of the recent transactions looking to a transfer. He had secured the most of his information from the newspapers and was not sure what condition his stock subscriptions were in. He considered himself safe in the 3 per cent. investment guaranteed by the Pennsylvania.

Ex-Governor English Married.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—Ex-Governor James E. English, of Connecticut, was married at noon to-day to Miss Anna Rice Morris, formerly of Georgia. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. Parder Morgan, of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, at the home of Henry B. Plant, president of the Southern Express Company. The groom is 74 and the bride a handsome brunette of 30. The bride has $75,000 in her own right and the groom's fortune is rated at $8,000,000. The bride is the granddaughter of the late Thomas D. Rice, of Savannah, Ga., who, with Henry R. Jackson, now United States Minister to Mexico, originated the Savannah Georgian. Her family on the paternal side dates back to the Pilgrim fathers. The ex-Governor is a prominent Democratic politician, was a member of Congress from his State in 1861 and 1865 and was elected Governor in 1868 and 1870. He says he has never known a sick day. He became engaged to Miss Morris last summer at Saratoga. It is a love match. They will pass the winter in Florida.

The Bridegroom Did not Appear.

LEBANON, Oct. 8.—A wedding sensation developed here to-day. Some time ago invitations were issued for the wedding of George Dougherty and Miss Lillie McCord, both of this place. A marriage license was procured in the Court House and the bride made every preparation for the wedding. The minister engaged to tie the knot was on hand to perform the ceremony and the guests had assembled. The bride was attired in her wedding gown, but her prospective husband came not. She was overcome with grief and the guests quietly departed. Officers now have in hand a warrant for Dougherty's arrest, sworn out before 'Squire Krieder by the young lady herself.

Burglar Jeff Davis Recaptured.

READING, Oct. 6.—John, alias "Jeff," Davis, a burglar, who escaped from the Court House here in August and has since then been occupied in tattooing boys around Lebanon, inflicting many with a loathsome disease, was captured at that place and lodged in jail here this morning.

Declared Innocent.

CHEYNNE, W. T., Oct. 7.—The Tribune publishes the following special from Greene River: "The grand jury, which has been in session here since last Friday, entered court yesterday and reported no bill against the sixteen persons arrested in connection with the Chinese riot at Rock Springs. About thirty witnesses have been examined, and the jury have been very thorough in their investigation of the affair, but it is rumored that the cases will be taken into the United States court." There is great excitement at Rock Springs over the release of the alleged rioters. The accused were met on their return from Greene River last night by several hundred men, women and children and treated to a regular ovation. The mines are turning out about half the usual quantity of coal. The company is importing many Mormons to fill the places of the blacklisted miners. One hundred more Chinamen were brought from the west Monday night.

A dispatch from Rawlins says that owing to the strike of coal miners on the Union Pacific system, people living along the road are likely to suffer from a coal famine. The railroad coal agent there is unable to fill orders, and the scarcity of coal is beginning to be severely felt. Reports from other points are to the effect that the company is not filling local orders, claiming that they need all the coal they can get for their own use. Should cold weather set in much suffering is sure to ensue. At Carbon the strikers still remain firm in their demands, and the miners are all idle. A force of twenty men arrived from Omaha on Monday night and are guarding the Union Pacific buildings. The miners say their presence is wholly unnecessary, as they have no intention of molesting the company's property. No trouble is likely to occur here unless an attempt is made to bring Chinamen in.

Caught in a Cyclone.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—Captain Oanglio and thirteen officers and seamen of the wrecked Italian bark Talesinano arrived here yesterday on the German bark Louisa and Augusta, by which they were rescued about 750 miles east of Sandy Hook on September 29.

Captain Oanglio said yesterday at the Italian consul's office: "We were forty-eight days out from Pensacola, bound to Port Glasgow, England, and on September 23 the bark sprung a leak. We managed to keep the vessel comparatively free from water for four days, until we were caught in a revolving hurricane or cyclone. The outbursts of wind were frightful and came from all points of the compass. The sea rose to a fearful height, so that we were not only in danger of having our masts twisted out, but feared we should be swamped by the seas. The leak increased, and for forty-eight hours the men worked at the pumps to keep the vessel afloat, while the unbroken volumes of seas swept the length of the deck, threatening to carry everything before them. Finally the gale broke, but our vessel was in a sinking condition, and our only hope was in being rescued.

"The bark Louisa Augusta was sighted about 9 a. m. last Tuesday, and she answered our signals of distress. At noon she was only about 200 feet from us, but the weather was so rough that to attempt to lower a small boat would be dangerous, and as our only alternative was to attempt to rescue ourselves we put off in our large boat, and in a few minutes were on deck of the German bark. Our own vessel was a perfect wreck, and was only kept afloat by her cargo of lumber."

Death of Cardinal McCloskey

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—1.20 a. m.—Cardinal McCloskey died at 12.50 o'clock this morning. He died peacefully, surrounded by relatives and clergymen.

[John McCloskey, D. D., was born in Brooklyn in the year 1810. He was the first president of Fordham college, New York, and was made bishop of Albany in 1847. He was created cardinal in 1875. His long life was spent in promoting the interests of the Catholic church in the United States, and his death will be mourned by the church for which he labored so hard. His death was the result of the gradual decay of his physical powers, and from the time he was last taken ill no hopes were entertained for his recovery.]

The Organ Wins the Day.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Oct. 8.—The synodic commission of the United Presbyterian church, which has been adjudicating an appeal of the pastor of the church here to use the organ of the church, closed their labors this morning with a three-hour session. They sustained the appeal favoring the retention of the organ. An appeal was at once made from the decision, to be considered at the meeting of the general assembly to be held in Hamilton, Onio, next May. The congregation is greatly elated over the result of the decision, and will at once begin the use of the organ.

A Dynamite Outrage in Ontario.

ORANGEVILLE, Ont., Oct. 7.—A dastardly attempt was made early this morning to blow up by means of dynamite the residences of Police Magistrate Monroe and Provincial Constable Anderson. Both houses were badly wrecked, but the inmates escaped unhurt. The cause of the outrage appears to be the commencement of prosecution against violators of the Scott temperance act by these officials. No arrests have yet been made.

Burglars at Work in Lancaster.

LANCASTER, Oct. 6.—A gang of burglars worked this city last night and a great many houses were entered. The restaurants of John Copland and John A. Snyder were broken into and considerable money cigars and liquor taken. The door of Al Smith's hotel was also pried, but the thieves were frightened away. These three saloons are the principal ones here and are right in the heart of the city. The thieves seem to have reorganized.

A Phenomenon at Sea.

QUEBEC, Oct. 8.—Capt. Hanson of the bark Pauline, from Cardiff for Quebec, says that on Sept. 20, during a rain storm, a brilliant ball of fire lodged on the deck, and for a few minutes played about from the cabin to the forecastle, prostrating him and two seamen. With a loud report the fiery visitor disappeared as suddenly as it came, without damaging the vessel,

A Disastrous Fire in London.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—A fire broke out at 5 o'clock this morning in the Charter house buildings, a row of thirteen eight story warehouses on Aldersgate street. The flames spread with such rapidity that in a few hours the whole of the buildings, including their contents were almost totally destroyed. The origin of the fire is unknown. The row was mostly occupied by fancy goods dealers, furriers, toy stores and printing offices. One bank was also in the buildings. This institution was the only one that escaped being burned completely out. It was badly damaged, but not destroyed. The firemen had great difficulty in getting the streams of the engines to play on the upper stories of the buildings Many narrow escapes were recorded owing to desperate attempts of the firemen to get at the flames. The damage is estimated at three million pounds.

Thrown from Her Saddle.

MONTREAL, Oct. 7.—This afternoon Miss Powell, the daughter of William Powell, professor of music in this city, was horseback riding, when the horse took fright and bolted along Dorchester street. The young lady kept her seat. With her hat off, her long fair hair streaming in the air, and her face as pale as death, she held on the reins while the horse galloped on. At St. Dominique street the horse swerved on the sidewalk, and Miss Powell narrowly escaped having her brains dashed out against a lamp post. At the door of Dr. Dagnais a cart was discharging coal, the horse standing out in the street. Miss Powell's horse tried to jump over the other horse, but fell on top of it, throwing her senseless on the sidewalk. She is now in a precarious condition from concussion of the brain.

Blind Tom in Court.

RICHMOND, Oct. 7.—In the United States Court to-day a decision was rendered in the case of blind Tom, the colored pianist. This is a suit in the name of Blind Tom, through his mother, Charity Wiggins, against James N. Bethune, for many years Tom's guardian, requiring an account of the earnings of Tom and their proper investment for the benefit of himself and heirs, and that Bethune be required to surrender Tom and defray the expenses of the suit. The motion was over-ruled without prejudice to plaintiff's right to renew it. It was further ordered that the injunction restraining Bethune from removing Tom beyond the limits of the State be continued, unless permission of one of the Judges of the court be first obtained.

A Fatal Balloon Ascension.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 9.—A terrible accident occurred at Union City, Tenn., yesterday. Prof. D. E. Johnson, who was billed there for fair week, made successful balloon ascensions Tuesday and Wednesday. Yesterday he tried to repeat the performance. He went up all right, but in descending the balloon fell in a tree. When the balloon was about 20 feet from the tree the Professor jumped and clutched a limb, which broke, and he fell 60 feet to the ground. In falling through the tree Johnson's body was terribly lacerated. He fell across a log and broke his right leg above and below the knee. Johnson cannot live. He is from Evansville, Indiana.

Very Romantic.

ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 8.—Miss Lillie Boss, a beautiful girl of 17, was to have married Jacob Wetherington, aged 66, at 10 o'clock yesterday morning at Valdosta. The marriage had been arranged by her parents. An hour before the time Miss Lillie fled from home in her bridal dress, and at a neighbor's house met Jesse Hardee, a former sweetheart. They went in a carriage to the office of a magistrate and were married. They then returned to the bride's house in time to meet the guests who had assembled to see Wetherington's marriage. Mr. Wetherington took the affair quietly, but declined to stay to the feast. The girl's parent's forgave her and all is now serene.

A Million Added to Millions.

DAYTON, O., Oct. 8.—Valentine Dickey, of Chicago, was married to Miss Lulu Platt, of Dayton, to-night. The groom is a cattle king of Texas, Indian Territory, Colorado and Wyoming. He was formerly a resident of Dayton, went West ten years ago and amassed an immense fortune. The bride is an heiress to over a million dollars. The bride's costume was an elegant white brocade satin, trimmed with a profusion of point lace, and diamond necklace and diamond ornaments in her hair.

From a Window.

POTTSVILLE, Oct, 6.—Sam Jenkins, an old man suffering from the effects of an army wound, was left by his attendant this morning for a few moments, with instructions to remain quiet for a little while. The attendant was hardly out of sight when Jenkins tottered to his window on the third floor for fresh air and pitched out head first. People at the Court House, across the way, picked up his crushed and bleeding body. He was 60 years old.

Stedecker's $7800 Gone.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—W. H. Stedecker, a bookmaker, placed his pocket-book containing $7800 on the seat in a railroad car in order to count other money with which he had just been paid a bill on the train going to Jerome Park races. On the arrival of the train at the track, being absorbed in conversation with a friend, he walked off leaving the pocket-book behind. Mr. Stedecker has not since seen his book nor money.

Mary Anderson in New York.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—Miss Mary Anderson arrived this morning on the steamship Gallia. The Gallia was met at quarantine by the steamer Cygnus, on which were about fifty friends of Miss Anderson.

There is no use in Fighting Nature. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy does nothing of that kind. It does not make the sufferers who trust it worse under the pretense of doing them good. It acts tenderly and in sympathy with what Nature herself is trying to accomplish. Do you have trouble with your digestion, your liver or your kidneys? Does rheumatism pain and rack you? Is your head thick and heavy? It will charm away these ailments almost ere you are aware.

—Mr. John Rishel, the youthful and agreeable druggist in Harris' pharmacy, while in Washington, D. C., a few days ago, took advantage of one of President Cleveland's reception days, to honor that high official with a call. He was the last in a long row of other dignitaries, which fact he at first feared might exclude him from a conversation with Cleveland. But it proved to his interest. The old saying came to pass that the first shall be last and the last first. After greeting cordially but briefly a long line of supreme court judges, congressmen, cabinet officers, etc., he pressed Mr. Rishel's palm with fervor and delight and, as there was no one else waiting for the privilege of shaking hands, the two gentlemen had quite a long conversation. Mr. Rishel informed the President all about Bellefonte—its new railroad, prospective iron furnace, and, last of all, about the big fish that Judge A. O. Furst can pull out of our mountain streams. The President expressed his pleasure at meeting Mr. Rishel and, ten chances to one, he will come here on a fishing excursion next June, and then Judge Furst may look well to his laurels as the piscatorial champion of the rippling Spring creek.

Taming a Parent.

Stern Father—"Look here, young man, your teacher tells me you excused yourself from school by telling her that your mother was sick. What do you mean by lying to your teacher, sir?"

"I didn't lie."

"Yes, you did. Your mother isn't sick, and you know it."

"She said she was."

"When?"

"Last night. She said she was sick of having you come home at 2 o'clock in the morning with your cuffs on your ankles."

"Well, of course, if she was sick it was perfectly right for you to stay out of school, my son. There, here's a nickel. Run off and get some candy, and we won't say any more about it."

—The Law and Order Society of Huntingdon, announce through the newspapers the beginning of its campaign against the violators of the Sunday and liquor laws. The resolutions adopted at the recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the Society are published as notice that when violators of those laws are brought to the attention of the Society with sufficient evidence to justify proceedings, prosecution will be brought against the accused. They do not mention the selling of newspapers or any other specific acts that will be punished as violation of the Sunday law.

—The double frame residence, one part of which is occupied by the family of Mr. James Lane and the other by the Messrs. Goldsmith, is being repainted a beautiful shade of pale green.

General Grant's Irish Mother.

"Andy Jackson," writing in the Philadelphia Protestant Standard, says:

Since the death of General Grant, most of our city newspapers have given sketches of him, in which they have been very anxious to inform the public that his father's family were Scotch; and from some motive known to themselves, they have even lied to conceal the very important fact that his mother, Hannah Simpson, was Irish. Matthew Simpson, a respectable farmer of Golan, Parish of Ardstraw, County Tyrone, Ireland emigrated with his young family to America, and settled on a farm, in Bucks county, Pa. His daughter Hannah became prominent as the mother of General Grant, and one of the sons was the father of the late Bishop Simpson of Philadelphia.

It was from Grant's Irish mother that he inherited his military talent, as his grandmother's family were very talented. General Stuart, the hero of the Soudan, was connected with the family. Grant was remarkably like the Simpsons in the formation of his head thick hair, and the form of his shoulders.

No family could be prouder of their Irish origin than the Simpsons. Bishop Simpson frequently visited Ireland. Some years ago he and Dr. John McClintock, whose parents were from Tyrona, visited the homes of their forefathers and spent a considerable time in the very ancient burying ground of Scarvahern where many of the Simpsons are buried.

This part of Tyrone has given to the world, people of rare talent; General Robert Patterson, General Jas. Shields, General Stuart, hero of the Soudan, Lord Chancellor O'Hagan, McClure, the Arctic Explorer, Farquharson, the celebrated dramatic writer, Will Carleton the Novelist, Mrs. Alexander, the authoress of "The Burial of Moses," parents of President Buchanan, Madam Bonaparte Patterson, president John McClintock, of Dickerson College, mother of General Grant, and the father of Bishop Simpson.

"Doctor," said a man, "I am overworked. I must have rest. What would you advise me to do?" "Join the Knights of Labor and quit work," the doctor replied.

An exchange has a long article on "The Race Problem." We thought the Puritan has settled that question for good.

The flames spread so rapidly that they barely escaped with their lives. The origin of the fire is a mystery. We understand that Mr. McCallister conducted the store and that Mr. Fowler owned the buildings.

AT THE TOMB.

Death of Mrs. Jane Fleming Mann, of Boiling Springs.

On Wednesday the sad intelligence became generally known in this place that Mrs. Jane Fleming Mann, of Boiling Springs, had passed into the dark valley of the shadow of death. The sad event had been expected by all her numerous friends, who knew that from day to day her hold on life had been growing frailer and that the nature of her disease was such as might cause her death at any moment. With sorrow they awaited the time when she should pass away, the suffering lady and her friends knowing that her last hours would be triumphant, for to such as she death has no sting.

Since Sunday, the 4th, she had been lying at death's door, and she breathed her last at 7:30 o'clock Wednesday morning. It can with truth be said that her death ended the earthly life of one of the most noble, generous, charitable ladies that has ever lived in any community. Her life was a living model of correctness and goodness. She made the happiness and comfort of those around her a careful study and administered to their needs as her large wealth enabled her to do. None knew her but to love her; none mentioned her but to praise; and thousands shall rise up and call her blessed.

Mrs. Mann was the widow of Harvey Mann, Sr., who died in June of 1870. Her maiden name was Jane Fleming Burnside. She was the daughter of Judge Burnside, Sr., and was born in this place February 28, 1810, making her age, at time of her death 75 years, 7 months and 9 days. She lived in Bellefonte until the time of her marriage, more than fifty years ago. Since then her life has been spent in the pleasant mansion at Boiling springs. There were born to this excellent couple four children, but death bereft her not only of her loving husband, but also of each of these children. One son died in infancy. Another son, James, died at the age of 21, and Rachel, a daughter, died of consumption when about the same age. Harvey, the last surviving son, met his death in an accident on the Pan Handle railroad, his death occurring about five years after that of her husband.

Her husband, Harvey Mann, Sr., had an extensive axe manufactory at Boiling Springs which, we believe, had been operated for many years, and it was principally through his genius and untiring industry that the Mann axes have become celebrated for their superiority and excellence. After his death she and her son, Harvey, carried on the factory. But when her son also died she settled up the large business and the manufacture of axes gradually passed into the possession and control of other members of the very large Mann connection.

Many a woman, perhaps, from whom had been removed all of those whom earth's affections hold most dear would have become melancholy and, in a measure, retired from the activities of the world to brood over her deep grief. But, from early youth, Mrs. Mann had been a sincere Christian; her disposition had ever been cheerful and her life an active one. She continued to move like a ministering spirit of goodness among her friends; devoting herself more entirely than ever to works of charity and usefulness. She gave very generously to to the Presbyterian church, of which she was a member, and to other religious institutions. She took a deep interest in the Bellefonte Y. M. C. A., who remember her gratefully for many kind words and deeds. Among her most notable works was the erection of a handsome church edifice at Boiling Springs, which she gave to the people of that vicinity for such religious services as they should choose to hold. To those related to her who at any time needed assistance she gave magnanimously, and not a person around her ever wanted for anything which she could supply.

As long as she was able to leave her home to drive the three miles from that place to Bellefonte her carriage was daily seen on the road. But of late these visits became less frequent, telling of her increasing infirmities. Even after being confined to the house she loved to entertain those who would call to inquire for her welfare. But her earthly life is ended and she has entered the happiness of eternity. The faithful servant has received her reward. Among the nearest of kin who survive to mourn her departure are her sisters Mrs. Morris, formerly of Philadelphia, and now of California; Mrs. Boal and Miss Lucy Burnside, of this place, and her brother, William Burnside, who lives in Philadelphia.

The funeral services occurred on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock at her late home at Boiling Springs. Then the body took its last journey to Bellefonte and were laid in the Howard street cemetery.

—The Watchman takes water on its Hoover, Hughes & Co. business and now makes a new charge, viz., that a "great many complain they could not do so (pay in cash) under a Republican administration." The DAILY NEWS named the parties who denied the first charges, now will the Watchman name the "great many" who thus complain, for we believe the complaint to be unfounded.

—The leafy foliage is falling fast.

When They are Embarrassed.

We do not suppose that any Centre county people ever exhibited so much embarrassment under similar circumstances as the Chambersburg Valley Spirit informs us was exhibited by some of the young people of that vicinity. A writer in that paper remarks that most people the moment they enter a parsonage to get married become so embarrassed they really are hardly conscious of what they are doing. One fellow I heard of was dreadfully afflicted in this way and without realizing his act pulled a cigar from his pocket and twirled it it around in his hands. When that portion of the ceremony was reached in which the lady and gentleman joined hands he happened to have the cigar in his right hand. What to do with that cigar he evidently did not know. The clergyman paused for a moment and then repeated the instruction that they join hands. By this time the poor fellow's embarrassment had increased so that it was really painful to behold. He gave one agonized look at the minister and then stuck the cigar in his mouth. Before the ceremony could be concluded the minister had to take the cigar from between his lips. Another prospective groom was in the same dire condition of mind. He was making a great effort to regain his composure by whirling around on his outstretched finger a silk hat when the minister announced his readiness to begin the service. The fellow quickly jumped up. For a second he did not know what to do with his hat, but only for a second, for he solved the problem by sticking the castor between his knees. The clergyman told me he could hardly refrain from laughter as he married that man standing in that ridiculous position he was forced to take.

Ready for Fall.

Autumn, although in a certain sense, a melancholy season, has nevertheless, much that renders it attractive.

While the leaves must fall and be trod under foot, mingling with the earth, before their time to fall they assume their richest, brightest colors.

During October the merchants display handsome goods of rich colors, rendering show windows very attractive.

Whatever work is to be done before Winter begins is done during these Fall months, consequently painters and carpenters are busy. Improvements made on dwellings render them bright and handsome, at least for awhile, until the wind and weather of the severer months to follow give them again a dingy appearance.

Then there is an occasional bright, warm day, which reminds us that the elements will not always be at war. These days fortify us for the vigorous weather of the dreary winter.

—While Dr. H. K. Hoy and Mr. John Dunkle were driving along the road, about six miles from town, in the direction generally described as "down the valley," on Wednesday, the 7th, the latter gentleman got out of the vehicle to go in search of chestnuts. Before he found many chestnuts he came to a place which had been quite marshy, but was now dry, where he found quite a lot of cranberry bushes with cranberries growing thereon. He grabbed some and hastening to the Doctor told him to come and help him pick them. They were quite surprised to find large, elegant cranberries in such a place and picked about two quarts, bringing the berries and also some of the bushes home with them. They had some of them for dinner on Thursday and found them excellent. The bushes are not more than two feet high and the leaves are so small and grow so close together on the branches as to almost resemble spruce.

—The first marriage license issued under the new law in Centre county, was granted by Register McClain Friday morning. It was not only the first application he has received, but the case was more than ordinarily complicated, requiring the presence of both the contracting parties to secure the application, and several of their relatives. The candidates for matrimony came from Snow Shoe and the blushing prospective bride is only eighteen years old and was born in Ireland. She says she has a guardian in the old country, but her aunt, who is her nearest of kin in America, gave consent to the marriage, which was accepted, after consulting counsel. The affair attracted considerable interest. All the parties carried themselves with proper decorum and gallantry, and Register McClain eat an unusually hearty dinner, as he felt the weight of the 50 cent fee in his pocket.

—Bellefonte was visited last Friday by Superintendent S. S. Blair of the Bald Eagle R. R. and several other officials, who came in Mr. Blair's special car. It is supposed that a change of the track and a new depot building were discussed.

—The funeral of the late Mrs. Jane Mann, of Boiling Springs, on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, was one of the largest that has ever occurred in this vicinity. About all the Bellefonte clergymen officiated.

—A decision, the first under a new act, and therefore regarded as one of much importance, was delivered a few days ago by Judge Reeder, of Easton. The Legislature, at its last session, passed a bill providing that hereafter in the trial of causes where either side is entitled to four challenges twenty jurors shall be summoned from the panel, and of these each side shall have a right to strike off four, leaving twelve to serve on the case. The act is an amendment of section 140 of the acts of 1834. In the trial of a criminal case there arose the question whether this new law applied to cases in the Quarter Sessions, and the position taken by council differed. It resulted in a decision that the act did apply to Courts of Quarter Sessions and Oyer and Terminer, "whenever the right to challenge is limited by the terms of the criminal procedure act to four challenges." In cases in Oyer and Terminer where defendants are entitled to twenty challenges, the law is not applicable and the old mode is in vogue.

—We are almost inclined to disbelieve the story which we noticed in the Altoona papers on Wednesday, and concerning which we see quite a long telegram in the Pittsburg Commercial Gazette. It relates that on the noon train on Tuesday, the 6th, from Hollidaysburg to Altoona, a genuine Western scene was enacted. It was the robbing of the passengers by four rough-looking men. When the train drew into Allegheny Furnace the whole four got up from their seats with revolvers drawn. Every man was ordered to hold up his hands and all went up automatically. Some of the ladies screamed, but were ordered to keep quiet. One of the passengers offered resistance. He knocked one of the robbers down, but was finally overpowered and severely injured. The conductor also received some rough handling. The work was done skillfully and quickly and when the robbers had accomplished it they pulled the bell rope, the train was slowed up and they jumped off. A search party was sent after the robbers, but they have not been captured.

—The coal business has received a big hoist from source in the Clearfield region, says the Philipsburg Ledger, and nearly every mine in this district is running full time, i. e., as full as the supply of cars will allow, for as is usual, when the demand for coal is brisk cars are correspondingly scarce. The price of coal is said to be firmer, with an upward tendency, and this is good news for several operators in this region who might have run full time, but who have held off and only shipped barely enough to keep the mine from lying idle, on account of the very low prices.

—Saturn is the morning star. He easily wins the first place on the October records, for a great event occurs in his history as he makes his long journey around the sun. He reaches perihelion, or his nearest point to the sun. This long expected epoch takes place on the 21st, at 7 o'clock in the morning. Nearly a whole generation will pass away before Saturn will be seen again in the favorable position he now occupies.

Railroad Accident.

On Friday the early morning train was wrecked at a place called Wikie's Run, on the Montandon and Bellefonte railroad, near Laurelton. In consequence of the fact that the construction train was at Sunbury the wreck could not be cleared in time to make way for the train which arrives in this place at 10:25 a. m. We understand that no one was injured by the accident.

—We notice that the Watchman is as silent as the tomb on the subject of Cleveland's criminal appointments. Wont that paper send us a challenge to produce some more which we have in stock.

A Word to Teachers.

You, to whom parents have entrusted their dear ones the approaching season, don't forget that your responsibilities are great—your duties many; that you are making impressions upon minds (those immortal treasuries) whose influence may not only be felt ages hence, but in eternity. Remember, also, that your words and actions not alone form the subject of thought and conversation around many, very many evening firesides, but furnish material for many little dreamers at night. Then, if you would succeed in your profession, guard well each word, each act both in and out of the school-room; have the co-operation of parents, and gird about you the armor of firmness, patience, perseverance, etc., and be sure you control yourself, else you will be incapable of controlling others. Teaching (like all else) has its sunshine and shadows, its joyous moments and its sad ones, yet, we derive much pleasure from the consciousness of having acted well our part; and years hence, when you behold the fun-loving boys and girls of to-day filling honorable positions in society, you will doubtless feel that your toil was not all in vain, but, as "Bread cast upon the water."

A TEACHER.

Fall Arbor Day.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Higbee has issued a letter to the various county superintendents in which he says: "The general observance of Arbor Day on April 16, in response to the proclamation of his excellency, Governor Pattison, was most gratifying. Many thousand trees were planted, whose grateful shade and luscious fruit will add enjoyment to the lives of tens of thousands in years to come. In some parts of the State, however, the ground was still frozen, or otherwise in unfit condition for the planting of trees, while in many localities the schools had already closed. That the schools of the entire State of Pennsylvania may all have opportunity to begin this good work during the current year, we name Thursday, the 29th day of October, as a school Arbor Day, on which shade trees, shrubs, vines, etc., shall be planted by schools upon their school grounds, under the general direction and encouragement of boards of directors, superintendents and teachers; on which also fruit trees, shade trees, etc., shall be planted about their homes by the individual pupils—boys and girls—by the teachers and by all others who may be sufficiently interested in this important work."

—A new counterfeit $20 gold piece has been discovered. It is described as follows: "It is dated 1880, and is the first of its kind that has ever made its appearance. The composition is apparently lead and glass, and it has a thin coating of gold wash. It weighs 206 grains, and is slightly larger than the genuine piece. It has a good ring, and unless closely examined as to color and size is likely to deceive."

—It is probable that Rev. Geo. W. Miller, a former pastor of the M. E. church here, will visit Bellefonte soon to deliver a lecture for the benefit of some one of the religious organizations of the town.

—The Ellis Family Bell Ringers, the finest in the world, will give an entertainment in Humes' Hall on Saturday evening, October 24, for the benefit of Gregg Post, G. A. R.

—Andrew Carnegie has presented a building in which to open a library to the employes of the Keystone Bridge Works in Pittsburg. It is worth $25,000.

$500,000 a Year.

Statement of the American, National and United States and Canada Express Companies, Troy, N. Y.

The strength of Rome lay not in her multitude, nor in her grain-laden fleets. These were elements of strength, but her never-failing resources lay in the self-control and discipline of Roman soldiers. Discipline—it is the very soul to all the wonderful meaning possessed by the word "veteran." Mr. Benedict, of Troy is a veteran in the express business. "Thirty three years," he said to your reporter, "I've stood at this desk." It is the discipline of years of experience which gives him the position he holds in the trust and esteem of these three great corporations. "We have a business of $500,000 a year, and I've been absent from this office hardly a month in all that time, although I must confess that many times I've worked here when suffering great pain, for I have been troubled all my life with biliousness and dyspepsia. My system had become so reduced and weak that I had no appetite, and my digestion wholly disordered. I've tried various remedies, but almost two years ago I happened to hit upon Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. After using only one bottle or so I began to feel stronger in every way. The great difficulty has been with my digestion, but this seems to regulate it perfectly. I have, sir, great faith in Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. I have bought and given a great deal of it to the poor around here; those, you know, who have no money to buy medicine of any kind, for there are a great many troubled with bilious diseases and suffer on without aid. I always keep FAVORITE REMEDY in the house. I consider it the best medicine for the blood in the market. Well, I must attend to this matter for the western part of the city. Say, you tell the Doctor I am coming down to Rondout to see him in August. I want to know him." I left the veteran, still at his post, rejoicing in health and grateful to Dr. Kennedy. 17 36 1y

The Will of the Late Mrs. Jane F. Mann.

The last will and testament executed by the late Mrs. Jane F. Mann, of Boiling Springs, is a remarkably long and very explicit document, making special legacies to about thirty different persons and naming her nephews, Thos B. Morris, Thos. Burnside and J. Cameron Burnside, as her residuary legatees, each of whom get one-third of what remains after the special legacies are all disposed of.

The sum of $500 is given, in trust, to keep the cemetery lot in good order.

A Church Gathering at Rebersbur

The Millheim Journal contains a notice of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod which met in the church at Rebersburg on Wednesday, September 30. It says the opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. M. Riemensnyder, of Lewistown, Pa., from Psa. 37:29.

The synod is composed of 33 pastorates, which were all represented. There were present 31 ministers and 27 delegates.

Thursday morning and afternoon were devoted to the business of the synod. The election of officers for the ensuing year in the forenoon resulted as follows: Rev. J. K. Miller, Logansville, Pa., President; Rev. L. C. McConnell, of Yeagertown, Mifflin Co., Secretary; Rev. W. H. Diven, Salona, Treasurer. At the afternoon session, Mr. H. S. Boner, Supt. of the Lutheran Publication House, Philadelphia, addressed the synod in the interest of the Publication Society, pointing out its benefits to the church, stating its remarkable success, and presenting its claims upon the synods, churches and Sabbath schools. A large congregation gathered in the evening, when Rev. L. A. Gotwald, D. D., delivered a plain, practical and pointed address on church extension, and Rev. J. A. Clutz, of Baltimore, secretary of Board of Home Missions, spoke in his usual earnest and forcible way of the work in and the needs of the Home Mission field. The work, he said, indicates great success all along the line and the great demand is for more laborers.

The day sessions of Friday were taken up with the business of the Synod, and in the evening Rev. C. E. Keller, of Salona, preached a sermon on an educated ministry, based upon Paul's exhortations to Timothy.

On Saturday the question of reestablishing the Ministerium occupied synod the greater part of the day. Synod decided its reestablishment. In the afternoon services preparatory to the Lord's supper were held. Rev. W. B. Glanding, of Lock Haven, preached the sermon. In the evening a large congregation gathered to hear Rev. Chas. Steck, of Bellefonte. Rev. Steck took for his subject "Reconcilation with God through Jesus Christ," making it clear and appealing with power that it might be personally affected for all.

Synodical communion was held on Sabbath morning at which Rev. A. C. Felker, of New Berlin, spoke in the English and Rev. J. G. Anspach, of Mifflinburg, in the German language. The services were impressive and profitable and the communion large. Revs. W. D. E. Scott, of Loysville, Rev. H. A. Letterman, of Beaver Springs, and A. K. Felton, of Pine Grove Mills, Pa., addressed the children's meeting in the afternoon. In the evening Rev. Romig was ordained to the Gospel ministry. Rev. A. K. Miller preached the sermon.

The work of the synod during the past year has been greatly blessed. Many have been added to the church. It numbers now 7321 communicant members. The benevolence of the churches, an important factor of pure and undefiled religion, is growing. Synod has 13 candidates for the ministry. The services were well attended throughout and the interest seemed unabated to the end. All seemed to feel that it was good to be there.

Bellefonte not the Scene of the Double Tragedy.

Bellefonte and her people have an enviable reputation among the towns and people of the State. It seems that some miscreant does not like this condition of affairs and desires to slander our fair fame to the people of the world. A few days ago a telegram appeared in the city papers giving an account of a shocking double tragedy, and locates the scene of it in Bellefonte. Of course, everybody in Bellefonte who read it knows that every word of the telegram was false so far as it relates to Bellefonte, Pa., and we would naturally suppose that the editor of the Lock Haven Daily Democrat might also be aware of this fact; but on Monday that journal contained the following, which we quote to show our readers what trash is being printed about Bellefonte:

Clarence Clark, a former wealthy druggist of Bellefonte, committed suicide some weeks ago, and Friday afternoon his wife killed herself by taking opium. Annie Johnson, twenty years ago, was the belle of Wilkesbarre. She was young, pretty and rich. Clarence Clark was then a successful business man and he succeeded in winning her affections. The young couple lived in style, and everything went well until Clarence commenced to drink and neglected his business. Annie followed in her husband's foot steps, and having acquired the habit of eating opium she became so low that she had no control over herself.

At last they took what remained of their fortune and went to Bellefonte, where for years they were known as terrible drunkards, living in an old shanty until their money was exhausted. The husband, driven to despair, blew out his brains. After her husband's death she drank worse, and Friday she was found dead in a shanty, with a quantity of opium in her hand, having evidently taken enough to kill her.

No, indeed, Bellefonte does not contain any such drunkards or any persons so prone to self-destruction as they. The telegram must be a forgery or else Bellefontaine, Ohio, is the place meant. Our borough desires no such notoriety.

Death of Mr. Samuel Olewine.

The sad news of the death of Mr. Samuel Olewine, which became generally known on Sunday, proved to be a severe shock to his many friends. His death occurred at 8 o'clock on Saturday evening and was the result of a stroke of apoplexy received on Friday.

The deceased was 61 years of age on the 21st of September. He was born in Kunkletown, Eldred township, Monroe county, this State, and had resided in this borough for many years. His wife died on the 22d day of July, eleven years ago.

Mr. Olewine resided in a comfortable and pleasant frame residence on Willow Bank Street, this borough. He was a most excellent citizen and a pleasant, courteous gentleman. Possessed of an ample income, he had, during recent years, lived a life of comparative retirement from active business affairs. He spent much time, when his health would permit, in making improvements to his property, attending to the garden connected with it and keeping everything in the neatest possible order, thus showing his naturally thrifty and industrious disposition. He will be greatly missed by hosts of friends and by the Lutheran church, which he attended regularly.

His one son, Mr. John Olewine, is a prominent, progressive young man, living near his father. He is a member of the hardware firm of James Harris & Co., and of the Electric Light Company. Three daughters survive the deceased and three sisters are living in Bethlehem, Northampton County.

The funeral services were held at his late residence in Willow Bank street, at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

—Mr. James Proudfoot, of Milesburg, spent Tuesday night in Bellefonte. Next morning he was standing on the pavement on the High street side of Graham's shoe store. It is said that he was intoxicated. While in this condition he slipped on the wet pavement, falling with great violence and striking his left temple on the hard stones. A dangerous gash was inflicted, extending almost down to his eye, which bled profusely. He was picked up in an unconscious condition and carried into Dr. H. K. Hoy's office. He soon revived sufficiently to be removed to his home in Milesburg. It is believed he will recover.

—Every Presbytery in the Synod has been heard from except three—Wellsboro, located in Pennsylvania; Presbytery of Zacatecas, in Mexico, and Presbytery of West Africa, in Liberia, Africa.

—An exchange says: Live newspapers are the best educators of country youth. This is well called "mail bag education," and is one of the greatest blessings of the century, though sometimes mixed with evil. But there is evil in most things. Such seems to have been the law of creation. Evil is that we may overcome it, and thus grow strong. Napoleon loved obstacles that he might combat them. Given a wise assortment of periodicals: an independent political journal; a calm, breezy, literary paper or magazine, a wide-awake progressive farm journal; one or more of each, and our boys of the farm will have material to keep their brains busy and free from rust. The seeds of evil may breed content with poor farming, poverty and narrowness. But such evil is good. Cherish it; water it with encouragement; cultivate it with wider knowledge; train it with better practice, a broader system of culture, contact with progressive men. Then the fruit may be self-gained education, valuable experience, and in the latter years a progressive, wise, successful, influential agriculturist. The world needs such men by thousands.

—For all except the strictest prohibitionists, who we believe exclude even sweet cider from their beverages, we commend the following as at least worth a trial: Pure sweet cider that is arrested in the process of fermentation before it becomes acetic acid or even alcohol, and with carbonic acid gas worked out, is one of the most delightful beverages and is not intoxicating. The following is recommended as a scientific method of treating cider to preserve its sweetness: When the saccharine matters by fermentation are being converted to alcohol, if a bent tube is inserted air tight into the bung, with the other end in a pale of water, to allow the carbonic acid gas evolved to pass off without admitting any air into the barrel, a beverage will be obtained that is a fit nectar for the gods. A handy way is to fill a cask nearly up to the faucet when the casket is rolled so that the bung is down. Get a common rubber tube and slip it over the end of the plug in the faucet, with the other end in the pail. When the water ceases to bubble, bottle or store away.

—Rev. G. D. Penepacker, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church, Altoona, says the Times of that city, has accepted a call from the First Methodist Episcopal church in the city of Duluth. In the two years of his ministry in this place he has amply sustained his high reputation as an earnest and energetic preacher. The good people of Duluth will find him a clear and vigorous preacher, a thoughtful and manly Christian gentleman. Few, if any, of the ministers of this conference have a more widely extended or better deserved reputation for successful ministerial work. His pastoral relation to the various charges that he has served with acceptability, has been not only as a rule uniformly pleasant, but he has demonstrated his pulpit ability in the large congregations that have always waited on his ministry.

On the Wing.

We learn that the carrier pigeon which was recently given its liberty at this place reached its home in Philipsburg the same day. Mr. Taylor, the owner of the bird, happened to be absent from home in Clearfield at the time, which accounts for the fact that ex-Sheriff Dunkle was not notified of the hour of its arrival.

To further test the time of the pigeon's flight, it was again brought to Bellefonte on Friday and let loose at 10:45 o'clock Saturday morning. It circled around above Bellefonte about a quarter of an hour and at 11 o'clock darted off in the direction of Philipsburg. At 11:50 o'clock word was telephoned that the bird had reached its home in Philipsburg, showing that the distance had been made in less than 50 minutes.

—The public is cordially invited to attend the services connected with the consecration of the Reformed church of Aaronsburg on the 25th inst., at 9:45 a. m. Prof. D. M. Wolf will preach the opening sermon on Wednesday evening previous. Rev. N. J. Miller will officiate on Friday evening. Rev. L. K. Evans, of Pottstown, will preach on Saturday evening and deliver the German address on Sunday morning. Prof. J. H. Dubbs, D. D., of Lanzaster, will preach on Sunday morning and evening; and a meeting of the several Sunday-schools of the town will be addressed in the afternoon, at 2½ o'clock.

—Major Wm. F. Reynolds has been greatly favored by his lady friends since occupying his new residence in the gift of elegant articles which ladies alone know how to make to perfection. Being a bachelor he appreciates these kind attentions. One present he specially admires and which he takes great pride in exhibiting is an artistically hand-painted china fruit set.

—Our Eagleville correspondent writes that Messrs. Samuel M. Hall and John Williams are making repairs to the Disciple church in that place, the building having been damaged by a recent storm. He also informs us that Mr. Perdy is the name of the new Baptist minister at that place. Miss Mary Glossner, he writes, is going to Lock Haven to reside.

—We wonder if Mr. William Harper has heard the good news from Ohio.

Sunday Services.

In St. John's Protestant Episcopal church Rev. Dr. Clerc, of Philipsburg, delivered a brief address before administering the Holy Eucharist in the morning, from the invitation of Matthew 11:28—"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." His evening sermon was based on Matthew 9:2—"Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." Rev. Dr. Clerc is a gentleman whose very appearance indicates one who is richly endowed with all the Christian graces. His demeanor is mild, pleasant an attractive, his voice soft, gentle and clear; his speech, in his extemporaneous addresses, impacsioned and earnest. He is passing into that serene and saintly old age, which is the inheritance only of the true Christian.

Rev. Chas. T. Steck preached both morning and evening in the Lutheran church. We have not heard the text of his morning discourse. His evening sermon was based on Isaiah 54:11.

Rev. H. B. Scott, Presbyterian minister at Snow Shoe, filled the pulpit of the Bellefonte church yesterday morning and evening. In the morning he preached from Isaiah 42.6, and his evening discourse was based on Rev. 4:8.

Rev. J. F. Delong's morning discourse was appropriate to the communion service to follow. He drew his lessons from the fall of manna in the wilderness, which was symbolical of the spiritual food of which we are partakers. His evening sermon treated of the birth, life and character of Samuel.

Baileyville Echoes.

OCTOBER 10, 1885.

Mr. Richard Irvin is improving.

The corn crop in this vicinity is larger than it has been for some time.

There were two heavy frosts in this neighborhood this week, one on Wednesday morning and the other this morning. The chestnut harvest will now begin.

Mr. J. C. Goheen and brother, our pleasant and enterprising merchants, are at present in the City of Brotherly Love, purchasing a full line of dry goods, groceries, etc. The Messrs. Goheen always keep a full line of general merchandise, and any person who gives them a call will be made happy with the bargains they get.

The Bryson ore mines were stopped several days last week to repair a broken shaft with a new one. They resumed operations the beginning of this week and are again working day and night. The ore mined at these mines is of a superior quality. It is made into pig iron at Pennsylvania Furnace at the rate of 25 to 30 tons a day, and this amount is not a sufficient quantity to supply the demand.

—We record with pleasure the notice of the favorable impression made by Major Hilton in his recent visit to Williamsport, and, more than this, the awakening of a new interest in this work for humanity by the friends of the cause. The doors of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches and Court House were thrown open for the meetings, so that all classes and conditions of men and women had opportunity to hear the affectionate and intense appeals in behalf of those in danger from drinking, and an earnest call, to all Christian people to come to the front in this conflict for the right over wrong. Major Hilton's work in Bellefonte for one week has been blessed with precious results. Suggestions from the experience of the Evangelist have been incorporated in the plans and methods of the W. C. T. U. The organization of the Union has been greatly benefited, and the general interest in the work will add to their efficiency.

—The Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., on Monday, took occasion to inform us that several numbers of magazines are needed at the reading room to complete the volumes now in the possession of the Association. They are as follows: Of the Century magazine, the February, (1883,) number of Vol. 25; and the April and October (1883) numbers of Vol. 26. Of Harper's New Monthly Magazine, the March (1874) number of Vol. 48; the August, (1874) number of Vol. 49; the July (1874) number of Vol. 51; the June and July (1877) number of Vol. 55, and the December (1881) and May (1882) numbers of Vol. 64. Of course, the idea of publishing this is to suggest to some kind person the expediency of supplying the missing numbers, which we hope will be done.

—The reception committee to receive the commissioners to the Presbyterian Synod consists of Rev. Wm. Laurie and Wm. P. Humes. We suggest that these gentlemen wear some sort of badges to designate them from ordinary humanity, that arriving delegates may know who to go to for information.

—We learn that Mr. Searfoss's bakery at Unionville was entirely destroyed by fire on Monday night about 12 o'clock. Insurance, $400.

—The elements, which had been comparatively peaceful for a few days, waxed furious again on Monday night.

—Snow fell three inches deep in the mountains near Sandy Ridge last week.

Events in Spring Mills.

Monday, October 12.

I see by your paper of the illness of Mrs. Woods. On Friday morning she died and was buried to-day at 1 o'clock.

I had a loss on Saturday night at half past 10 o'clock. Parties crushed in the glass of my car, c wled in and tore the velvet off of two of my instruments, or cameras. I used the velvet for screening the head while getting the focus on the subject. If you see anyone with a few yards of velvet under his arm stop him.

There is a great rush here from other parts, and the four stores and two hotels are doing a good business.

FLOATING ARTIST.

—The special reporter is now working Bedford county with considerable vigor. His latest narrative informs us that a ferocious panther is now ravaging the country in the neighborhod of Chaneyville, and that a few days ago one Philip Swartzwelder had a fearful encounter with the brute, wherein the man was badly hurt, though he managed to escape. The same or another beast followed William Bartlebow for several rods the other day.
